

DELHI UNIVERSITY LIBRARY SV

DELHI UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Cl. No. 0:2564:44

F9

Ac. No. 13359

Date of release for loan

This book should be returned on or before the date last stamped below. An overdue charge of 06 nP. will be charged for each day the book is kept overtime.

THE ARDEN SHAKESPEARE
GENERAL EDITOR: W. J. CRAIG
1891-1906: R. H. CASE, 1909

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

THE WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

EDITED BY

W. OSBORNE BRIGSTOCKE

METHUEN & CO. LTD.
86 ESSEX STREET: STRAND
LONDON

Second Edition, Revised

First Published August 1904
Second Edition, Revised 1929

PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	IX
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL	I

INTRODUCTION

All's Well that Ends Well, first published in the folio of 1623, is certainly one of the worst printed plays in the volume. It teems with obscure and corrupt passages, some of which, in spite of the erudition and ingenuity of generations of Shakespeare scholars, are still unexplained. There is almost unlimited scope for conjecture; consequently, one of the main difficulties is the sifting of endless emendations. I have throughout endeavoured to be as conservative of the original folio text as possible, relying rather on the reading of the first folio than on the versions of the other three, adopting subsequent emendations or conjectures only when supported by what seemed to me conclusive arguments. It seems preferable to leave doubtful readings as they are in the original; for conjectural corrections, unless quite indispensable, are best confined to the footnotes.

With regard to the carelessness of the printing, Hudson says that "it may be worth the while to observe . . . that in respect of plot and action the piece is of a somewhat forbidding, not to say repulsive, nature; and though it abounds in wisdom and is not wanting in poetry, and has withal much choice delineation of character, and contains scenes which stream down with the poet's raciest English, yet it is not among the plays which readers are often drawn to by mere recollections of delight; . . . the poet may have left the manuscript in a more unfinished and illegible state, from a sense of something ungenial and unattractive in the subject-matter and action of the play."¹ Perhaps: but surely the fact that the play is supposed to have been remodelled after the lapse of several years is hardly in keeping with the idea that Shakespeare saw something ungenial in the subject-matter. On the contrary, all seems to lead us to suppose that Shakespeare liked the subject sufficiently well to revise the greater part of an old comedy he had written years before, and also to treat of the same subject in Measure for Measure. Be that as it may, the play certainly does, as Dr. Hudson says, abound in wisdom and contain scenes which stream down with the poet's racial English.

The data we possess for determining the time of composition are lamentably scant. Of direct, certain evidence there is none; neither external nor internal. All's Well that Ends Well is mentioned neither by contemporary theatre-goers nor in the Registers. In the piece itself there is nothing to point conclusively to a definite period—or rather, there are many things which point to different periods. Certainly not much to go upon.

In Meres's Palladis Tamia there is the mention of a play called Love's Labour's Wonne. Though Halliwell is of the opinion that this play has been lost, most critics agree that, considering the commercial value of Shakespeare's name, it is hardly likely that such a thing can have happened. If we possess the play at all, it is evident that we must have it under a different title. There are three plays which may not unreasonably be called tales of "love's labour's won," namely, The Tempest, The Taming of the Shrew, and All's Well that Ends Well. This is not the place to discuss the several claims of these three plays: the battle has been fought out, and critics are now almost unanimous in declaring that All's Well that Ends Well is, in all probability, the play that Meres calls Love's Labour's Wonne;—a conclusion first arrived at by Dr. Farmer in his Essay on the Learning of Shakespeare (1767).

¹ Hudson, Shakespeare: His Life, Art, and Characters, vol. i. p. 374.

This would not only prove that the play must already have been written by the year 1598; it would also lead one to suppose that it was written in connection with Love's Labour's Lost—either before or shortly after it, as a sequel—presumably the latter, as Love's Labour's Lost is one of the very earliest plays we possess. That being so, 1590 might be taken to be the date of the first composition. Love's Labour's Lost was published in 1598, "newly corrected and augmented"; and it is possible that the companion play, though not published, may have undergone a similar correction about that time.

In the play itself we cannot find much to help us. There are two or three passages which suggest that Shakespeare may just possibly have made use of certain works published between 1594 and 1598, to which reference will be found in the corresponding places in the notes, viz.: at II. ii. 23, IV. iii. 119, and IV. iii. 146. Another passage (V. iii. 83-87) seems to Elze to refer to the gift of a ring by Elizabeth to Essex when he departed for Cadiz in 1596. He writes: "The circumstance of the ring is strangely not referred to till this last scene; and may have been introduced into the fifth act, at a remodelling in 1597, say, when Shakespeare would know of the Essex incident."¹ Halliwell-Phillipps thinks that Shakespeare may have seen Deloney's second part of the Gentle Craft (1598), and taken from it the incidents of the Parolles story.

The style and diction of a play are, as a rule, most useful in determining the period of composition; but in All's Well that Ends Well these tests are of very little use, for they have led distinguished and learned critics to assign dates ranging from 1590 to 1606.

Elze thinks that "the unmistakable beauties of composition and characterisation" are indications that the piece cannot have been written very early. Though Helen's letter is written in sonnet form and though the Italian style is still prominent, he considers that it is certainly less pronounced than in the very early work. Rhyme is fairly abundant, and the clown is not furnished with all the proverbs and snatches of song which are characteristic of the clown of Shakespeare's later period. I gather from this that Elze would agree with Drake, who gives 1598, or with Chalmers, who gives 1599. Ulrici thinks the peculiar diction a sign of early composition, and gives 1590-1593; Hertzberg, on the other hand, thinks that this peculiar diction clearly indicates a late date of composition, say 1603; and he dismisses the idea that the play may have been written at two different periods. Malone at first conjectured 1598, and subsequently changed his mind and said 1606. Knight holds that there is no proof that it was written after 1590. Though Delius emphatically asserts that the characteristic peculiarities of this play are in no way connected with the characteristic peculiarities of Shakespeare's early plays, Gervinus and v. Friesen are in favour of the theory that the play was written early and subsequently revised. The former writes: "The rhymed passages, the alternate rhymes, the sonnet letter of Helena, point to the form which the piece probably more uniformly bore, when with its first title it was placed by the side of Love's Labour's Lost, to the style of which those passages nearly correspond. By far the greatest part of the play, however, must have undergone . . . remodelling, for the prose-scenes, the soliloquies, which in profound thought and force often call to mind Hamlet and Timon, and challenge all the interpreter's art of arrangement, punctuation, and transposition, the comic passages, which in substance and form recall the scenes of Falstaff, all evidently belong to the later period of the poet's writing; [probably to] the years 1605 or 1606."¹ It was also Coleridge's decided opinion that All's Well that Ends Well was written at two different and rather distant periods of the poet's life, and Verplanck, who is of the same opinion, writes: "The contrast of two different modes of thought and manners of expression here mixed in the same piece, must be evident to all who have made the shades and gradations of Shakespeare's varying and progressive taste and mind at all the subject of study. Much of the graver dialogue, especially in the first two acts, reminds the reader in taste of composition, in rhythm and in a certain quaintness of expression of The Two Gentlemen of Verona. On the other hand, there breaks forth everywhere, and in many cases entirely predominates, a grave moral thoughtfulness, expressed in a solemn, reflective and sometimes in a sententious levity of phrase and harshness of rhythm which seem to me to stamp many passages as belonging to the epoch of Measure for Measure or King Lear. We miss, too, the gay and fanciful imagery which shows itself continually alike amidst the passion and the moralising of the previous comedies." Hudson closes his remarks on this question as follows: "To my taste, the better parts of the workmanship relish strongly of the poet's later style—perhaps I should say quite as strongly as the poorer parts do of its earlier. This would bring the revision down to as late a time as 1603 or 1604: which date accords, not only with my own sense of the matter, but with the much better judgment of the critics I have quoted. I place the finished Hamlet at or near the close of the poet's middle period; and I am tolerably clear that in this play he discovers a mind somewhat more advanced in concentrated fulness, and a hand somewhat more practised in sinewy sternness than in the finished Hamlet." ¹

¹ See Essays on Shakespeare, Karl Elze, tr. L. D. Schmitz (1874), p. 147.

¹ Gervinus, Commentaries (All's Well . . .), Eng. trans. by Bunnnett, ed. 1863, vol. ii. p. 241, lines 10-22.

Thus, in spite of the undoubted difficulties due to the frequent changes of metre, style, and language, and in spite of the much more questionable inconsistency in dramatic power and moral tone, there are many weighty supporters of the theory that All's Well that Ends Well was written early and remodelled later; that there are clearly two distinct styles, the one reminding one of the earliest plays, the other of the great plays of the period of tragedy; that the fourfold recurrence of the proverb "All's well that ends well" in the text of the play, and the apparent blending of the two titles in "All is well ended, if this suit be won,"¹ are strong circumstantial evidence in favour of accepting Dr. Farmer's conjecture that All's Well that Ends Well is the play mentioned by Meres in his Palladis Tamia under the name Love's Labour's Wonne; and lastly, that the faulty passages, which have baffled everyone, may be accounted for by supposing them to mark the places where the old and new versions were joined, and their obscurity to be due either to new passages being omitted or else inserted in the wrong place.

¹ Shakespeare: His Life, Art, and Characters, ed. 1872, p. 377, lines 12-23.

Everyone who reads this play is at first shocked and perplexed by the revolting idea which underlies the plot. It is revolting, there is no doubt about it; and it leaves so unpleasant a flavour with some people that it is not tasted again. I hold that the taste for All's Well that Ends Well is an acquired taste: and when the taste has once been acquired, one wonders how the revolting side of the plot could ever have hidden the manifold, and in certain respects unique, interest of the play. I say unique, because in no other play, so far as I know, do we have so curious a blending of Shakespeare's various styles; here a passage of florid rhetoric characteristic of the earliest work, here a phrase which seems a bettered version of some lines in King John, and there gleams of irony that surely come reflected from the dark period of King Lear, Measure for Measure, or Hamlet. Furthermore, the eye in time becomes accustomed to the brightness of Helen's personality, and recognises round her a number of lesser characters, unnoticed before. By studying to understand what Shakespeare added to the authentic story, we may come to conjecture why the tale of Helen's labours touched him, and in what spirit he intended us to read his rendering of it.

¹ See Epilogue, p. 164, line 2, post.

The story on which the play is founded forms Nov. 9, Giorn. iii. of the Decameron. Shakespeare must have read it in Paynter's version (Palace of Pleasure, 4to, 1566), for it can hardly be a coincidence that both English writers call the people of Sienna "the Senois." Paynter's "version of the tale of Giglietta di Nerbona is faithful, and that seems to have been the principal excellence at which he aimed: he . . . seems generally satisfied with the first word that presented itself to his mind, if it conveyed sufficiently the meaning of his author."¹ This is his version of Boccaccio's novel:—

"Giletta a phisician's daughter of Narbon, healed the Frenche Kyng of a fistula, for reward whereof she demaunded Beltramo Counte of Rossiglione to husbände. The Counte beyng married againste his will, for despite fled to Florence and loved an other. Giletta his wife, by pollicie founde meanes to lye with her husbände, in place of his lover, and was begotten with child of two soonnes: which knowen to her husbände, he received her againe, and afterwarde he lived in greate honor and felicitie.

"In Fraunce there was a gentleman called Isnardo, the Counte of Rossiglione, who bicause he was sickly and diseased, kepte alwaies in his house a phisicion, named maister Gerardo of Narbona. This counte had one onely sonne called Beltramo, a verie yonge childe, pleasaunt and faire. With whom there was nourished and broughte up, many other children of his age: emonges whom one of the doughters of the said phisicion, named Giletta, who ferventlie fill in love with Beltramo, more then was meete for a maiden of her age. This Beltramo, when his father was dedde, and left under the roial custodie of the Kyng, was sente to Paris, for whose departure the maiden was very pensive. A little while after, her father beyng likewise dedde, she was desirous to goe to Paris, onely to see the younge counte, if for that purpose she could gette any good occasion. But beyng diligently looked unto by her kinsfolke (bicause she was riche and fatherless) she could see no conviente waie for her intended journey: and being now mariageable, the love she bare to the counte was never out of her remembraunce, and she refused many husbandes with whom her kinsfolke would have placed her, without making them privie to the occasion of her refusall. Now it chaunced that she burned more in love with Beltramo than ever she did before, bicause she heard tell that hee was growen to the state of a goodly yonge gentlemanne. She heard by report, that the Frenche Kyng had a swellng upon his breast, whiche by reason of ill cure was growen to a fistula, and did putte him to merveilous pain and grief, and that there was no phisicion to be founde (although many were proved) that could heale it, but rather did impair the grief and made it worsse and worsse. Wherefore the Kyng, like one that was in dispaire, would take no more counsaill or helpe. Whereof the yonge maiden was wonderfull glad, and thought to have by this meanes, not onelie a lawfull occasion to goe to Paris, bût if the disease were suche (as she supposed) easely to bryng to passe that she might have the Counte Beltramo to her husbnde. Whereupon with such knowledge as she had learned at her fathers handes before time, shee made a poudre of certain herbes, which she thought meete for that disease, and rode to Paris. And the first thing she went about when she cam thither was to see the Counte Beltramo. And then she repaired to the Kyng, praying his grace to vouchsafe to shewe her his disease. The Kyng perceivynge her to be a faire yonge maiden and a comelie, would not hide it, but opened the same unto her. So soone as she sawe it, shee putte hym in comforte, that she was able to heale hym, sayng: 'Sire, if it shall please your grace, I trust in God without any paine or grief unto your highness, within eighte daies I will make you whole of this disease.' The Kyng hearyng her saie so, began to mocke her, sayng: 'How is it possible for thee, beyng a yong woman, to doe that which the best renowned phisicians in the worlde can not?' He thanked her for her good will, and made her a directe answere, that he was determined no more to followe the counsaile of any phisicion. Whereunto the maiden answered: 'Sire, you dispise my knowledge bicause I am yonge and a woman, but I assure you that I doe not minister phisicke by profession, but by the aide and helpe of God: and with the cunnyng of maister Gerardo of Narbona, who was my father, and a phisicion of greate fame so longe as he lived.' The Kyng hearyng those wordes, saied to hymself: 'This woman, peradventure, is sent unto me of God, and therefore why should I disdain to prove her cunnyng? sithens she promiseth to heale me within a litle space, without any offence or grief unto me.' And beyng determined to prove her, he said:

¹ Payne Collier, "Shakespeare's Library," 1843, vol. ii.

‘Damosell, if thou doest not heale me, but make me to breake my determinacion, what wilt thou shall folowe thereof.’ ‘Sire,’ saied the maiden: ‘Let me be kept in what guarde and kepyng you list: and if I dooe not heale you within these eight daies, let me bee burnte: but if I doe heale your grace what recompence shall I have then?’ To whom the Kyng answered: ‘Bicause thou art a maiden and unmarried, if thou heale me accordyng to thy promisse, I wil bestowe thee upon some gentleman, that shalbe of right good worship and estimacion.’ To whom she answered: ‘Sire, I am verie well content that you bestowe me in mariage: but I will have suche a husbunde as I my self shall demaunde, without presumption to any of your children or other of your bloudde.’ Which requeste the Kyng incontinently graunted. The yong maiden began to minister her phisicke, and in shorte space before her appointed tyme, she had thoroughly cured the Kyng. And when the Kyng perceived himself whole, said unto her: ‘Thou hast well deserved a husbunde (Giletta) even suche a one as thy selfe shalt chose.’ ‘I have then my lorde (quod she) deserved the Countie Beltramo of Rossiglione, whom I have loved from my youthe.’ The Kyng was very lothe to graunte hym unto her: but bicause he had made a promys which he was lothe to breake, he caused hym to be called forthe, and saied unto hym: ‘Sir counte, bicause you are a gentleman of greate honour, our pleasure is, that you retourne home to your owne house, to order your estate according to your degree: and that you take with you a damosell which I have appoincted to be your wife.’ To whom the counte gave his humble thankses, and demaunded what she was? ‘It is she (quoth the Kyng) that with her medicines hath healed me.' The counte knewe her well, and had alreadie seen her, although she was faire, yet knowing her not to be of a stocke convenable to his nobilitie, disdainfullie said unto the King, 'Will you then (sir) give me a phisicion to wife? It is not, the pleasure of God that ever I should in that wise bestowe my self.' To whom the Kyng said: 'Wilt thou then, that we should breake our faithe, which we to recover healthe have given to the damosell, who for a rewarde thereof asked thee to husband?' 'Sire (quoth Beltramo) you maie take from me al that I have, and give my persone to whom you please, bicause I am your subject: but I assure you I shall never be contented with that mariage.' 'Well you shall have her, (saied the Kyng) for the maiden is faire and wise, and loveth you moste intirely: thinkyng verelie you shall leade a more joyfull life with her, then with a ladie of a greater house.' The counte therewithal helde his peace, and the King made great preparacion for the mariage. And when the appointed daie was come, the counte in the presence of the Kyng (although it were against his will) married the maiden, ~~who~~ loved hym better then her owne self. Whiche dooen, the counte determyng before what he would doe, praied licence to retourne to his countrie to consummat the mariage. And when he was on horsebacke he went not thither, but tooke his journey into Thuscane, where understanding that the Florentines and Senois were at warres, he determined to take the Florentines parte, and was willinglie received and honourable interteigned, and made capitaine of a certaine number of men, continuynge in their service a longe tyme. The newe married gentlewoman, scarce contented with that, and hopynge by her well doynge to cause hym to retourne into his countrie, went to Rossiglione, where she was received of all his subjectes for their ladie. And perceivng that through the countes absence all thinges were spoiled and out of order, she like a sage lady, with greate diligence and care, disposed all thynges in order againe; whereof the subjectes rejoysted verie much, bearyng to her their hartie love and affection, greatlie blamyng the counte bicause he could not contente himself with her. This notable gentlewoman having restored all the countrie againe, sent worde thereof to the counte her husbände, by two knightes of the countrie, whiche she sent to signifie unto hym, that if it were for her sake that he had abandoned his countrie, he should sende her worde thereof, and she to doe hym pleasure, would depart thence. To whom he chorlishlie saied: 'Lette her doe what she list: for I doe purpose to dwell with her, when she shall have this ryng (meanyng a ryng which he wore) upon her finger, and a soonne in her armes begotten by me.' He greatly loved that ryng, and kepte it verie carefullie, and never tooke it of from his finger, for a certaine vertue that he knewe it had. The knightes hearyng the harde condicion of twoo thinges impossible: and seying that by them he could not be removed from his determinacion, thei retourned againe to the ladie, tellinge her his answer: who, verie sorrowfull, after she hadde a good while bethought herself, purposed to finde meanes to attaine to those twoo thynges, to the intende that thereby she might recover her husbände. And havynge advised with her self what to doe, she assembled the noblest and chiefest of her countrie, declaring unto them in lamentable wise what shee had alredie dooen, to winne the love of the counte, shewyng them also what followed thereof. And in the ende saied unto them, that she was lothe the counte for her sake should dwell in perpetuall exile: therefore she determined to spende the rest of her tyme in pilgrimages and devocion, for preservacion of her soule, praiyng them to take the charge and governmente of the countrie, and that they would lette the counte understande, that she had forsaken his house, and was removed farre from thence: with purpose never to retourne to Rossiglione againe. Many teares were shedde by the people, as she was speakyng these wordes, and divers supplications were made unto him to alter his opinion, but al in vaine. Wherefore commending them all unto God, she tooke her waie with her maide, and one of her kinsmen, in the habite of a pilgrime, well furnished with silver and precious Jewelles: tellyng no man whither shee wente, and never rested till she came to Florence: where arrivng by fortune at a poor widowes house, she contented her self with the state of a poore pilgrime, desirous to here newes of her lorde, whom by fortune she sawe the next daie passing by the house (where she lay) on horsebacke with his companie. And although she knewe him well enough, yet she demaunded of the good wife of the house what he was: who answered that he was a straunge gentleman, called the counte Beltramo of Rossiglione, a curteous knight, and wel beloved in the citie, and that he was mervellously in love with a neighbor of hers, that was a gentlewoman, verie poore and of small substaunce, neverthesse of right honest life and report, and by reason of her povertie was yet unmarried, and dwelte with her mother, that was a wise and honest ladie. The countess well notyng these wordes, and by litle and litle debatyg every particular point thereof, comprehendynge the effecte of those newes, concluded what to doe, and when she had well understood whiche was the house, and the name of the ladie, and of her doughter that was beloved of the counte: upon a daie repaired to the house secretlie in the habite of a pilgrime, where finding the mother and doughter in poore estate emonges their familie, after she hadde saluted them, tolde the mother that she had to saie unto her. The gentlewoman risynge up, curteouslie interteigned her, and beyng entred alone into a chamber, thei satte doune, and the countesse began to saie unto her in this wise. 'Madame we thinke that ye be one upon whom fortune doeth frowne, so well as upon me: but if you please, you maie bothe comfort me and your self.' The ladie answered, 'That there was nothyng in the worlde whereof she was more desirous then of honest comforte.' The countesse procedynge in her talke, saied unto her: 'I have nede now of your fidelitie and trust, whereupon if I doe staie, and you deceiue mee, you shall bothe undoe me and your self.' 'Tel me then what it is hardelie (saied the gentlewoman :) if it bee your pleasure: for you shall never bee deceived of me.' Then the countesse begaune to relate her whole estate of love: tellyng her what she was, and what had chaunced to that present daie, in such perfite order that, the gentlewoman belevyng her woordes, bicause she had partlie heard report thereof before, begaune to have compassion upon her, and after that the countesse had rehearsed all the whole circumstaunce, she continued her purpose, saying: 'Now you have heard emonges other my troubles, what twoo thynges thei bee, whiche behoveth me to have, if I do recover my husbände, which I knowe none can helpe me to obtayn, but onely you, if it bee true that I heare, which is, that the counte my husbande, is farre in love with your 'doughter.' To whom the gentlewoman saied: 'Madame, if the counte love my doughter, I knowe not, albeit the likelihoode is greate: but what am I able to doe, in that which you desire?' 'Madame,' answered the countesse, 'I will tell you: but first I will declare what I mean to doe for you, if my determinacion be brought to effect: I see your faier doughter of good age, redie to marie, but as I understand the cause why she is unmarried, is the lacke of substance to bestowe upon her. Wherfore I purpose, for recompense of the pleasure, which you shall dooe for me, to give so much redie money to marie her honorably, as you shall thinke sufficient.' The countesse' offer was very well liked of the ladic, bicause she was but poore: yet having a noble hart, she said unto her, 'Madame, tell me wherein I maie do you service: and if it be a thing honest, I will gladlie performe it, and the same being brought to passe, do as it shal please you.' Then saied the countesse: 'I thinke it requisite, that by some one whom you trust, that you give knowledge to the counte my husbande, that your doughter is, and shalbe at his commaundement: and to the intent she maie bee well assured that he loveth her in deede above any other, that she praieth him to sende her a ring that he weareth upon his finger, whiche ring she heard tell he loved verie derely: and when he sendeth the ryng, you shall give it unto me, and afterwarde sende hym woorde, that your doughter is redie to accomlishe his pleasure, and then you shall cause him secretly to come hither, and place me by hym (in steede of your doughter) peradventure God will give me the grace, that I maie bee with childe, and so havynge this ryng on my finger, and the childe in myne armes begotten by him, I shall recover him, and by your meanes continue with hym, as a wife ought to doe with her husbände.' This thing seemed difficulte unto the gentlewoman: fearyng that there would followe reproche unto her doughter. Notwithstanding, consideryng what an honest parte it were, to be a meane that the good ladie should recover her husband, and that she should doe it for a good purpose, havynge affiaunce in her honest affection, not onely promised the countesse to bryng this to passe, but in fewe daies with greate subtiltie, folowyng the order wherein she was instructed, she had gotten the ryng, although it was with the countes ill will, and toke order that the countesse in stede of her doughter did lye with hym. And at the first meetyng, so affectuously desired by the counte: God so disposed the matter that the countesse was begotten with child, of twoo goodly sonnes, and her delivery chaunced at the due time. Whereupon the gentlewoman, not onely contented the countesse at that tyme with the companie of her husbände, but at many other times so secretly that it was never knowen: the counte not thinkyng that he had lye with his wife, but with her whom he loved. To whom at his uprisyng in the mornyng, he used many curteous and amiable woordes, and gave divers faire and precious jewelles, whiche the countesse kepte most carefullie: and when shee perceived herself with childe, she determined no more to trouble the gentlewoman, but saied unto her, 'Madame, thanks be to God and you, I have the thyng that I desire, and even so it is tyme to recompence your desert, that afterwarde I maie departe.' The gentlewoman saied unto her, that if she had doen any pleasure agreable to her mind, she was right glad thereof whiche she did, not for hope of rewarde, but because it appertained to her by well doying so to doe. Whereunto the countesse saied: 'Your sayng pleaseth me well, and likewise for my parte, I dooe not purpose to give unto you the thing you shall demaunde of me in rewarde, but for consideracion of your well doying, which duetie forceth me to so dooc.' The gentlewoman then constrained with necessitie, demaunded of her with greate bashfulnesse, an hundred poundes to marie her doughter.' The countesse perceivyng the shamefastnesse of the gentlewoman, and hearyng her curteous demaunde, gave her five hundred poundes, and so many faire and costly jewels whiche almoste amounted to like valer. For whiche the gentlewoman more then contented, gave most hartie thanks to the countesse, who departed from the gentlewoman and retourned to her lodging. The gentlewoman to take occasion from the counte of any farther repaire, or sendyng to her house, tooke her doughter with her, and went into the countrie to her frendes. The counte Beltramo, within fewe daies after, beyng revoked home to his owne house by his subjectes, (hearyng that the countesse was departed from thence) retourned. The countesse knowynge that her husband was gone from Florence and retourned into his countrie, was verie glad and contented, and she continewed in Florence till the tyme of her child-bedde was come, and was brought a bedde of twoo soones, which were verie like unto their father, and caused them carefullie to be noursed and brought up, and when she sawe tyme, she toke her journey (unknownen to any manne) and arrived at Montpellier, and restyng her self there for certaine daies, hearyng newes of the counte, and where he was, and that upon the daie of All Saintes, he purposed to make a great feast and assēblie of ladies and knightes, in her pilgrimes weede she wente thither. And knowyng that thei were all assembled, at the palace of the counte, redie to sitte doune at the table, she passed through the people without change of apparell, with her twoo sonnes in her armes: and when she was come up into the hall, even to the place where the counte was, fallyng doune prostrate at his feete, wepyng, saied unto him: 'My lorde, I am thy poor infortunate wife, who to the intent thou mightest returne and dwel in thine owne house, have been a great while beggyng about the worlde. Therefore I now beseche thee, for the honour of God, that thou wilt observe the condicions, whiche the twoo knightes (that I sent unto thee) did commaunde me to doe: for beholde, here in myne armes, not onelie one sonne begotten by thee, but twaine, and likewise thy ryng. It is now tyme then (if thou kepe promis) that I should be receiued as thy wife.' The counte hearyng this, was greatly astonned, and knewe the ryng and the children also, thei were so like hym. 'But tell me (quod he) how is this come to passe?' The countesse to the great admiration of the counte, and of all those that were in presence, rehearsed unto them in order all that, whiche had been doen, and the whole discourse thereof. For whiche cause the counte knowyng the thynges she had spoken to be true (and perceiuyng her constaunt minde and good witte, and the twoo faier yonge boies to kepe his promise made, and to please his subjectes, and the ladies that made sute unto him, to accept her from that time forthe as his lawfull wife, and to honour her) abjected his obstinate rigour: causyng her to rise up, and imbraced and kissed her, acknowledgyng her againe for his lawfull wife. And after he had apparelled her according to her estate, to the greate pleasure and contentacion of those that were there, and of all his other frendes not onelie that daie, but many others, he kepte great chere, and from that tyme forthe, he loved and honoured her, as his dere spouse and wife."

It was from this uncouth version of the story that Shakespeare drew inspiration for Helena—according to Coleridge "his loveliest creation." Mrs. Jameson tells us that "in Helena we have a . . . character . . . allied, indeed, to Juliet as a picture of fervent, enthusiastic, self-forgetting love, but differing wholly from her in other respects; for Helen is the union of strength of passion with strength of character . . . a character almost as difficult to delineate in fiction as to find in real life . . . touched with the most soul-subduing pathos and developed with the most consummate skill.

"Helena, as a woman, is more passionate than imaginative; and, as a character, she bears the same relation to Juliet that Isabel bears to Portia. There is equal unity of purpose and effect, with much less of the glow of imagery and the external colouring of poetry in the sentiments, language, and details. It is passion developed under its most profound and serious aspect; as in Isabella we have the serious and the thoughtful, not the brilliant side of intellect. Both Helena and Isabel are distinguished by high mental powers, tinged with a melancholy sweetness; but in Isabella the serious and energetic part of the character is founded in religious principle, in Helena it is founded in deep passion.

"There never was, perhaps, a more beautiful picture of a woman's love, cherished in secret, not self-consuming in silent languishment—not pining in thought—not passive and ‘desponding over its idol’—but patient and hopeful, strong in its own intensity, and sustained by its own fond faith. The passion here reposes upon itself for all its interest; it derives nothing from art or ornament or circumstance; it has nothing of the picturesque charm or glowing romance of Juliet; nothing of the poetical splendour of Portia or the vestal grandeur of Isabel. The situation of Helena is the most painful and degrading in which a woman can be placed. She is poor and lowly: she loves a man who is far her superior in rank, who repays her love with indifference, and rejects her hand with scorn. She marries him against his will; he leaves her with contumely on the day of their marriage, and makes his return to her arms depend on conditions apparently impossible. All the circumstances and details with which Helena is surrounded are shocking to our feelings and wounding to our delicacy; and yet the beauty of the character is made to triumph over all; and Shakespeare, resting for all his effect on its internal resources and its genuine truth and sweetness, has not even availed himself of some extraneous advantages with which Helen is represented in the original story . . . Helena, in the play, derives no dignity or interest from place or circumstance, and rests for all our sympathy and respect solely upon the truth and intensity of her affections. She is, indeed represented to us as one

Whose beauty did astonish the survey
Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took captive;
Whose dear perfection hearts that scorn'd to serve
Humbly call'd mistress,

As her dignity is derived from mental power, without any alloy of pride, so her humility has a peculiar grace . . . She is more sensible to his greatness than to her own littleness: she is continually looking from herself up to him, not from him down to herself. She has been bred up under the same roof with him; she has adored him from infancy. Her love is not 'th' infection taken in at the eyes' nor kindled by youthful romance: it appears to have taken root in her being, to have grown with her years, and to have gradually absorbed all her thoughts and faculties, until her fancy 'carries no favour in it but Bertram's,' and 'there is no living, none, if Bertram be away.' . . .

"And although Helena tells herself that she loves in vain, a conviction stronger than reason tells her that she does not: her love is like a religion, pure, holy, and deep: the blessedness to which she has lifted her thoughts is for ever before her; to despair would be a crime—it would be to cast herself away and die. The faith of her affection, combining with the natural energy of her character, believing all things possible, makes them so. It could say to the mountain of pride which stands between her and her hopes, 'Be thou removed!' and it is removed. This is the solution of her behaviour in the marriage scene, where Bertram, with obvious reluctance and disdain, accepts her hand, which the King, his feudal lord and guardian, forces on him. Her maidenly feeling is at first shocked, and she shrinks back—

That you are well restor'd, my lord, I am glad:
Let the rest go.

But shall she weakly relinquish the golden opportunity, and dash the cup from her lips at the moment it is presented? Shall she cast away the treasure for which she has ventured both life and honour, when it is just within her grasp? Shall she, after compromising her feminine delicacy by the public disclosure of her preference, be thrust back into shame, 'to blush out the remainder of her life,' and die a poor, lost, scorned thing? This would be very pretty and interesting, and characteristic in Viola or Ophelia, but not at all consistent with that high, determined spirit, that moral energy, with which Helena is portrayed. Pride is the only obstacle opposed to her. She is not despised and rejected as a woman, but as a poor physician's daughter; and this, to an understanding so clear, so strong, so just as Helena's, is not felt as an unpardonable insult. The mere pride of rank and birth is a prejudice of which she cannot comprehend the force, because her mind towers so immeasurably above it; and, compared to the infinite love which swells within her own bosom, it sinks into nothing. She cannot conceive that he to whom she has devoted her heart and truth, her soul, her life, her services, must not one day love her in return; and once her own beyond the reach of fate, that her cares, her caresses, her unwearied, patient tenderness, will not at last 'win her lord to look upon her'—

• . . . For time will bring on summer,
When briers shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp!

It is this fond faith which, hoping all things, enables her to endure all things; which hallows and dignifies the surrender of her woman's pride, making it a sacrifice on which virtue and love throw a mingled incense."¹

¹ Mrs. Jameson, Characteristics of Women (Shakespeare's Heroines).

I cannot feel much sympathy for the elaborate German treatise in which "pride of rank" is held to be the vice ridiculed, the fact that "worth is rank" the moral of the play.¹ It seems preferable to avoid making each drama turn as it were on some central pivot: life does not move in that way. Any fragment of life may contain one or all of the ideas that German critics would prove to be singly the keynote of a play. May we not more profitably study to see what part of this life Shakespeare most clearly sympathises with, which runner is his favourite, what way of running evidently the one that seems best to him? No one denies that Shakespeare is as nearly impersonal as it is possible to be. But it is hardly possible for anyone to make a plain statement of facts, giving both sides of each case, without betraying his own opinion—if only by the wording of the phrases. Each play is essentially a statement of facts: and each play contains, at least to a certain degree, a statement of both sides of all questions. It is from this, and almost exclusively from this, that we must hope for reliable information regarding Shakespeare's theories of life. Professor Dowden writes: "The Elizabethan drama is thoroughly free from lassitude, and from that lethargy of heart, which most of us have felt at one time or another. . . . To this mood of barren world-weariness the Elizabethan drama comes with no direct teaching, but with a vision of life. Even though death end all, these things at least are—beauty and force, purity, sin, and love, and anguish and joy. These things are, and therefore life cannot be a little idle whirl of dust. We are shown the strong man taken in the toils, the sinner sinking farther and farther away from light and reality and the substantial life of things into the dubious and the dusk, the pure heart all vital, and confident, and joyous; we are shown the glad, vicarious sacrifice of soul for soul, the malign activity of evil, the vindication of right by the true judiciary; we are shown the good common things of the world, and the good things that are rare; the love of parents and children, the comradeship of young men, the exquisite vivacity, courage and high-spirited intellect of noble girlhood, the devotion of man and woman to man and woman. The vision of life rises before us; and we know that the vision represents a reality."¹ And a reality looked at not in the light of its being transient, but as being of great value and worth fighting for. Many of the Elizabethans knew how to value life and to make the most of it, and it is interesting to see what price the greatest of them puts on some things we might look upon as being useless. Not one of us but feels at first that Bertram is absolutely worthless, a rogue, a liar, and mean. It is significant that Shakespeare has intensified the moral failings of this man and made him more repulsive still by laying emphasis on his superficial attractiveness. There seems to be a hint of this at the very beginning (Act I. sc. i.), when the Countess says, "Where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations go with pity; they are virtues and traitors too"; though it must be confessed that Bertram's good qualities may be summed up by saying that he was handsome and brave. *

¹ Gervinus, Shakespeare Commentaries, tr. Bunnett, 1863, vol. i. p. 252: "The idea, that merit goes before rank, has, as we shall presently see, expressly occupied Shakespeare's mind in the period before us."

¹ Shakespeare: His Mind and Art, p. 30 sq.

Youth, thou bear'st thy father's face ;
Frank nature, rather curious than in haste,
Hath well composed thee. Thy father's moral parts
Mayst thou inherit too !

But at that time Bertram had not inherited, as far as one could see, any of his father's moral parts—or if he had, they had grown viciously. Both contempt and bitterness were in his pride; his honour was not clock to itself, nor did he obey the hand of it; and, though he was born of so good a father, all went to demonstrate that Bertram was but a goer backward. He was one of those men who make a good impression—"Whatsome'er he is, he's bravely taken here," says Diana. But however much we despise Bertram, it is unnecessary to go to the length of saying that Helen's love for him is "a tragic perversion." Surely there are two most weighty arguments in his favour: Helen—"Shakespeare's loveliest creation"—thought him worth struggling for: and Shakespeare let him have her. Dr. Herford calls it irony. But Helena's wish to cure the King seemed rather tragic—and yet it proved successful; and, as Elze has pointed out, she cures Bertram as she cured the King. To the King she says:

What is infirm from your sound parts shall fly,
Health shall live free, and sickness freely die.

The same with Bertram. His disease was Parolles—a snipt-taffeta fellow, as the Countess describes him, whose villanous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Of him Bertram is rid when he accepts Helen. But Dr. Herford holds that Shakespeare had never yet pictured the tragic perversion of a maiden's passion, as he does here. He goes on to say: "It is a picture characteristic of the years when in Julius Cæsar and in Hamlet he was laying bare, with deepening irony, the fatalities which lie in wait for the weakness of noble characters. The issues are here less grave, but the irony is even more pronounced, in so far as Helen's passion for Bertram seems to spring not from any flaw in her clear and penetrating mind, but from something fundamentally irrational in the nature of love itself. Christian idealism sees the peculiar glory of love in its power of transcending and ignoring distinctions of merit and pouring itself forth on the mean and lowly. Modern Romanticism, from a kindred but distinct point of view, has delighted to picture the salvation of a worthless man by a woman's devoted love. But neither of these transcendent ways of looking at love is anywhere suggested in Shakespeare. Helen's love is an idolatry, and finds its highest expression in adoring self-subjection: yet the triumph of her love is merely external. Of the sequel we are left to form what ominous conjecture we may from the perfunctory declaration of the shrewd bogglers in the last lines:

If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly
I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly."

That is one way of looking at the play. Of course the question of what "ominous conjectures" we are likely to make, is not one to argue. Some will agree with Dr. Herford and expect the worst. Others may prefer not to conjecture at all: they may find plenty to enjoy in the play, troubling themselves as little about what happened "ever, ever after" as the Elizabethans did, in practical life, about what was to happen in the "undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveller returns." Lastly, there may be some who think that the prospect is not so gloomy after all. To be sure, Bertram is indeed "haughty, rash and unbridled, assuming though ill-advised, influenced by the most wretched society, and entirely devoid of judgment and reflection" (Gervinus). But throughout there is a force of character which works in the opposite direction: Helen appears "humble, meek, modest, but perfectly mature, wise and prudent, endowed with high aspirations and instinctively impelled to follow them" (Gervinus). Is it not probable that the influence of Helen's clear purpose and resolute will (she has been called the antithesis to Hamlet), will end by giving Bertram's character the wisdom and the experience he so sorely stands in need of? It must have been a great shock to his pride to discover how entirely Parolles had duped him: and a still more wholesome lesson to him to learn how he had been deceived by Diana. Lafeu speaks contemptuously of him, and his words must have touched him to the quick. All the evil influence is taken from him: he has the guidance only of such friends as the King and his mother, besides an angel to bless him, unworthy husband that he is. The Countess declares that he cannot thrive

Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear
And loves to grant, relieve him from the wrath
Of greatest justice.

May we not suppose that "all is well ended" because her prayers do relieve him from the wrath of justice?

There is no Parolles in the original story. Elze suggests that he is meant to show us what Bertram may become if Helen does not succeed in wooing him, just as we see in the Countess what Helen will one day be like. He has been compared with Falstaff, which is not only irrelevant, but also a little unfair on our fat friend. The witty knight may justly disclaim any relationship to this cowardly liar. Parolles must rather be looked upon as the etymon of that Iago whose last words were

From this time forth I never will speak word.

In Othello the "window of lattice" was not so easy to look through; it was so well shuttered that Desdemona, instead of being able to say, "one that goes with him . . . I know him," was left in ignorance,

If any such there be, heaven pardon him . . .

so securely fastened that Othello did not "find" him until it was too late. All the terrible possibilities which lie in a man like Parolles if he happens to be not "a great way fool" were developed in Iago, a terrible incarnation of malice.

Shakespeare's Countess is a charming old lady: full of tenderest sympathy for the sweet girl she has, so to speak, adopted; she loves her as a daughter—and it is noticeable that one can hardly conceive of anyone else being able to be so kind and helpful to her. "Under the circumstances Helena's mother would not have been at all a fitting person to assist and encourage her love. The Countess was required, with her gentle disposition. She loves Helena for her purity, her honesty, her clear-sightedness, her modesty, her beauty ; her love and esteem are increased the more Helena does to bring about her love's desire, until she loves her almost as much as her son" (Elze).

Lafeu, the steward, and the clown are also Shakespeare's own creations.

In Dr. Halliwell-Phillipps's notes on this play I find two passages which I venture to quote verbatim.

" It is worthy of remark that Shakespeare's comedy at a later period, seems to have passed under the name of Monsieur Parolles, that appellation being assigned to it by King Charles I. in a manuscript note in a copy of the second folio of 1632, preserved at Windsor Castle, which formerly belonged to that unfortunate monarch. No notice of All's Well that Ends Well, under that title, has been discovered of a date previous to its entry on the books of the 'Stationers' Company, in November 1623, where it is placed in the list of 'soe manie of the said copies as are not formerly entred to other men.' "

" No records of any early performance of All's Well that Ends Well has yet been discovered, and it does not appear to have been revived in the seventeenth century after the accession of Charles II., nor, indeed, until October 1741, when it was produced at Drury-lane theatre, Mrs. Woffington taking the part of Helena and Theophilus, Cibber that of Parolles. It was again revived, under the superintendence of Garrick, in 1757, when Mrs. Prichard acted the Countess ; Miss Macklin, Helen ; Mrs. Davies, Diana ; Woodward, Parolles ; Berry, Lafeu ; and Davies, the King. In the year 1785 it was altered by Frederic Pilon, reduced to three acts, and performed at the Haymarket theatre, but this version was not printed. The alteration in use at the theatres during the last sixty years is that by Kemble, in which the offensive peculiarities of the story are to a great extent concealed, and the principal condition in Bertram's letter entirely omitted. . . . It is scarcely a matter of surprise that the performance of the drama in this vitiated form, should not have met, at any recent period, with the success that it probably commanded on the Shakespearean stage."

Mr. P. A. Daniel's time-analysis of this play is as follows:—

Day 1. Act I. sc. i.

Interval. Bertram's journey to Court.

Day 2. Act I. sc. ii. and iii.

Interval. Helena's journey to Court.

Day 3. Act II. sc. i. and ii.

Interval, two days. Cure of the King's malady.

Day 4. Act II. sc. iii., iv., and v.

Interval. Helena's return to Rousillon. Bertram's journey to Florence.

Day 5. Act III. sc. i. and ii.

Day 6. Act III. sc. iii. and iv.

Interval, "some two months."

Day 7. Act III. sc. v.

Day 8. Act III. sc. vi. and. vii., Act IV. sc. i. and ii.

Day 9. Act IV. sc. iii. and iv.

Interval. Bertram's return to Rousillon. Helena's return to Marseilles.

Day 10. Act IV. sc. v., Act v. sc. i

Day 11. Act v. sc. ii. and iii.

Total time about three months: eleven days represented on the stage.

By the courtesy of the British Museum authorities I have been able to base the present text upon their copies of the folios. I have also had before me the Cambridge Shakespeare, invaluable to anyone who studies the text critically. I gained something from most of the editions I consulted, and it is therefore impossible to acknowledge my indebtedness more particularly. I have throughout endeavoured to mention my authority, whenever I knew the source of my information.

I am indebted to Mr. A. E. Thielton's 'notes on the play'; though I have not always been able to agree with his versions, his comments are excellent and in many ways most valuable. Professor Proescholdt has constantly aided me with criticisms and suggestions, and Mr. W. J. Craig, Editor of the Oxford Shakespeare, placed his large collection of manuscript notes at my disposal, and also the manuscript of his "Little Quarto Shakespeare." Any value that this edition may possess is entirely due to their generous assistance. I take this opportunity of expressing my thanks for this valuable assistance.

References to plays of Shakespeare other than All's Well that Ends Well are given with the numbering (etc.) of the Globe edition.

1904

I am very much indebted to Professor R. H. Case, who has spent much time and thought in correcting errors and misprints, and arranging such improvements as are practicable in a stereotyped edition.

1929

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ¹

KING OF FRANCE.

DUKE OF FLORENCE.

BERTRAM, Count of Rousillon.

LAFEU, an old Lord.

PAROLLES, a Follower of Bertram.

RINALDO, Steward to the Countess of Rousillon.

LAVACHE, Clown, in her household.

A Page.

COUNTRESS OF ROUSILLON, Mother to Bertram.

HELENA, a Gentlewoman protected by the Countess.

A Widow of Florence.

DIANA, Daughter to the Widow.

VIOLENTA,² } Neighbours and Friends to the Widow.
MARIANA, }

Lords,³ Officers, Soldiers, etc., French and Florentine.

SCENE: Rousillon; Paris; Florence; Marseilles.

¹ Dramatis Personæ] Not given in the 1623 F. First mentioned by Rowe.

² Violenta] a mute personage; retained because some have thought that Diana's first speech in III. v. may belong to her.

³ The characters called by Rowe First and Second Lord are variously named in Ff. See note at opening of Act II. p. 40.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

ACT I

SCENE I.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter BERTRAM, the COUNTESS OF ROUSILLON, HELENA, and LAFEU, all in black.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew; but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection. 5

Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam; you, sir, a father. He that so generally is at all

3 And I, in going, madam] F 1; And in going madam F 2, 3; And in going, madam, I Rowe.

Rousillon] or Roussillon, an old province of France, separated from Spain by the Pyrenees. Perpignan was the capital, as it is of the modern department of Pyrénées-Orientales, which occupies nearly the same territory. (Rolfé.)

4. attend] be in attendance on; cf. "each hath his place and function to attend" (1 Henry VI. i. i. 173).

5. in ward] When the feudal lord of an estate died, the heir, if still a minor, became the ward of the sovereign, who often deputed some nobleman to "take the charge." The sovereign could even dispose of his ward's marriage.

7. of the king] Cf. "even such a husband Hast thou of me as she is for a wife" (Merchant of Venice, III. v. 89). "We shall find of him A shrewd contriver" (Julius Cæsar, II. i. 157).

8. generally] altogether. Cf. "This gentleman To whom we all rest generally beholding" (Taming of the Shrew, I. ii. 274).

times good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it 10 wanted rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; 15 under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the process but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father,—O, that "had," how sad a passage 'tis!—whose skill 20

11. lack] slack Theobald (Warburton). 16. persecuted] prosecuted Hanmer.

9. hold] continue to devote. Cf. "I hold my duty, as I hold my soul, Both to my God and to my gracious king" (Hamlet, II. ii. 44).

10-12. worthiness . . . abundance] your worthiness is such that it would win "virtue" not only from a king at all times good, but even from one slow to kindly feeling.

11. lack] Theobald's proposal to substitute "slack" for "lack" seems good. The word in question is clearly in antithesis to "stir it up," and it is rather difficult to get much meaning out of "worthiness lacked it."

16, 17. persecuted . . . hope] Schmidt says: "not very intelligibly used." The meaning is: the king for a while hoped so fervently, that the idea of time was banished from his mind: he had, by the advice of his physicians, maltreated the present time and inflicted upon himself much pain in the hope of ultimately curing his disorder; time had, however, outlived the persecution and ended by quashing hope. Time=lifetime; cf. "out of thy long experienced time, Give me some counsel" (Romeo and Juliet, IV. i. 60). Mr. Thirlton (quoting Minshew) connects "persecute" with "persequor." But is there anything to show that Shakespeare used "persecute" in its primary sense?

20. that "had"] Blackstone quotes the Heautontimorumenos of Terence, where Menedemus says:

"—Filius unicum adolescentulum Habeo. Ah, quid dixi? habere me? imo—habui, Chreme Nunc habeam necne incertum est." The same idea has been made use of by Dante, Spenser, and others.

20. sad a passage] "Passage is anything that passes. So we now say a passage of an author; and we used to say, the passages of a reign. When the Countess mentions Helena's loss of a father, she recollects her own loss of a husband, and stops to observe how heavily the word 'had' passes through her mind." This is Johnson's explanation. The word is a difficult one to understand. Dowden conjectures "occurrence," as in Cymbeline, III. iv. 94, "act of common passage." The word occurs again in Comedy of Errors, III. i. 99, "Now is the stirring passage of the day." Steevens quotes "two philosophers that jeer and weep at the passage was almost as great as his honesty; had it stretch'd so far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. Would, for the king's sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the king's disease. 25

Laf. How called you the man you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so: Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent indeed, madam: the king very lately spoke of him admiringly, and mourningly. 30
He was skilful enough to have liv'd still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality. ✓

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?

Laf. A fistula, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before. 35

Laf. I would it were not notorious. Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Count. His sole child, my lord; and bequeathed to my overlooking. I have those hopes of her good that her education promises; her dispositions she 40

22. would] it would Rowe, 't would Singer. 23. have play] have had play Hanmer, have play'd Warburton. 40. promises; her] Rowe, promises her Ff, promises her; Pope; dispositions] disposition Rowe.

of the world" in the English Intelligencer, a tragi-comedy, 1641. The word undoubtedly does mean "occurrence" very frequently. Steevens quotes other instances where this meaning is perfectly evident. Nevertheless I am inclined to prefer the explanation that "passage" here means "passing away." The word is so used by Shakespeare: "would some part of my young years Might but redeem the passage of your age!" (1 Henry VI. II. v. 108). "When he is fit and seasoned for his passage" (Hamlet, III. iii. 86).

21. honesty] honourable character. 28. has great right] his fully justified right, due to him as a great man.

34. fistula] a swelling on the breast, aggravated by neglect into a fistula (see p. xvii ante); "a long sinuous pipe-like ulcer with a narrow orifice" (N.E.D.).

39. hopes] expectations. Cf. "I shall falsify men's hopes" (1 Henry IV. I. ii. 235).

40. her dispositions] she derives her honesty, without which no goodness acquired by education could be fair. I am inclined to think the reading inherits, which makes fair gifts fairer; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations go with pity; they are virtues and traitors too: in her they are the better for their simpleness; she derives her honesty and 45 achieves her goodness.

Laf. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. 'Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praise in. The remembrance of her father never 50 approaches her heart but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheek. No

45. their] her Hamner (Warburton).

"disposition," is right, though the interpolation of "s" in the comedies is not frequent. Walker conjectures that this common misprint was due to some peculiarity in Shakespeare's handwriting which increased as he grew older. If so there seems to be no reason why this should not be one of these misprints—the passage being in all probability of later date than some of the rhymed portions.

42. virtuous qualities] This use of virtuous is akin to the Italian use of the word virtuoso, implying the passione delle belle arti made perfect by practice. Shakespeare is alluding only to those qualities which can be acquired by a mind either naturally honest or naturally unclean. In the north the word often meant "ingenious." Steevens understands it so here; as in Chapman's Iliad, viii. "our virtuous engine," and also Marlowe's Tamburlaine, Dyce, pt. i. v. ii. p. 33a:

"One thought, one grace, one wonder at the least,

Which into words no vertue can digest."

43. go with pity] go with regret, "pity" being often used to express what we call "a pity."

43, 44. virtues and traitors] Johnson has a long note on this expression, the meaning of which seems to be that cleverness (virtue) in an unclean mind is treacherous virtue (quality) because it inspires an admiration in others which tends to make them forget that it is "a pity."

45. simpleness] opposite of subtleness. Cf. R. Greene, A Quip for an Upstart Courtier, p. 1, "there grew many simples whose virtues taught me to be subtle." There is an evident play on the words here.

48. tears] probably placed at the end of the sentence for emphasis and to "give the cue" to the following speech.

49. season] frequently used by Shakespeare. "Salt . . . (i.e. tears) to season love" (Romeo and Juliet, II. iii. 72). See also Troilus and Cressida, I. ii. 278; Twelfth Night, I. i. 30. It has been called a coarse metaphor; but, as Knight points out, it was in Jesus' mind when he said, "Ye are the salt of the earth" (Matt. v. 13). Cf. also L'Estrange's Fables: "children should be seasoned betimes and lessened."

52. livelihood] animation (Middle English live-lode = life leading). This is the only use of the word in Shakespeare.

more of this, Helena; go to, no more; lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow than to have—

Hel. I do affect a sorrow indeed, but I have it too. ✓ 55

Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal. ✓

Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes. . . . 60

Laf. How understand we that? . . .

53, 54. lest . . . have—] lest you be rather thought to Hanmer, . . . to have it. Warburton, to have. Steevens, have it. Capell. 58. If the living . . . grief] the grief be enemy to the living Gould conj., be not the enemy Theobald (Warburton). 60, 61.] Theobald conj. transposes these two lines.

53. lest . . .] a strange construction, but the meaning is obvious:—lest you be thought rather to affect a sorrow than to feel it. Such slight inaccuracies are not peculiar to Shakespeare, as Malone has thought necessary to prove in detail.

54. than to have—] I think this must be left; it is impossible to say that Shakespeare did not write this: therefore we dare not change it.

55. I do affect . . .] Helena seems to be speaking half to herself—"there is indeed an outward show of sorrow, but I am really unhappy too." Cowden Clarke pertinently calls attention to the fact that these, Helena's first words, render her meaning so indistinctly that it is undivined by those around her, only half perceived even by the reader. It is the beginning of what the king calls "the bitter" (v. iii. 332), and the subject of the play is how the "bitter passed" and ended well.

58. If the living . . .] Johnson paraphrases, "If the living do not indulge grief, grief destroys itself by its own excess." Malone quotes Winter's Tale, v. iii. 51, in support of Johnson's interpretation:

" . . . scarce any joy
Did ever live so long; no sorrow
But kill'd itself much sooner."

Also Romeo and Juliet, II. vi. 9: "These violent delights have violent ends, And in their triumph die." The word "mortal" often means "deadly" in Shakespeare. Cf. Othello, II. i. 72.—This whole speech has been assigned by many editors to Helena, and the arguments in favour of the suggestion are plausible. The great objection is that there seems to be little reason for doubting the correctness of the Ff. It is clearly an antithetical reply to Lafeu's remark, and logically belongs to the Countess, who said "No more of this" just before. Mr. Thielton suggests that "the living" = the Countess; meaning "that if she did not combat Helena's grief, it would soon be the death of Helena."

61. How . . . that?] This is a strange speech. But it seems still stranger if we transpose it. Where place it? After line 55? then we have two speeches running. After 59? then Bertram's interruption is rude. Perhaps so. I cannot accept as unreservedly as does Mr. Thielton Kinnear's "admirable" explanation that this is the "humorous allusion to the possibility of the Countess' wishes being anything else but holy."

Count. Be thou blest, Bertram; and succeed thy father
 In manners, as in shape! thy blood and virtue Contend for empire in thee; and thy goodness
 Share with thy birthright! Love all, trust a few, ✓65
 Do wrong to none: be able for thine enemy
 Rather in power than use, and keep thy friend
 Under thy own life's key: be check'd for silence,
 But never tax'd for speech. What heaven more will
 That ~~thee~~ may furnish, and my prayers pluck down, 70
 Fall on thy head! [To Lafew] Farewell, my lord;
 'Tis an unseason'd courtier; good my lord,
 Advise him.

68, 69. check'd . . . tax'd] tax'd . . . check'd Daniel conj. 71. head] F 1; hand F 2, 3, 4; Farewell, my lord] Farewell my Lord Ff, Farewell--my lord Lafew Capell. 71-75.] Hammer makes the lines end with 'tis an advise him: attend: Bertram. He is followed by Dyce. S. Walker gives lines ending with my lord Lafew my lord that shall Bertram, reading in line 74 can't for cannot. 73. Advise him] Advise him you Capell.

65. Share with] be equal to. Cf. "Think not to share with me in glory any more" (1 Henry IV. v. iv. 64). With the following lines cf. Euphues's Advice to Philautus (The Complete Works of Lyly, ed. Warwick Bond, vol. ii. p. 223, etc.).

66. be able] Have power to daunt your foe, but practise not your power upon him. Cf. "Be ye angry and sin not." Johnson informs us that "able for" is not often nor very properly used. It occurs in Wilkins's Mathematical Magic, "There have been inventions which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds." Cotgrave gives, "To be able or sufficient = être suffisant."

68. check'd] rebuked for being silent. Cf. Julius Caesar, iv. iii. 97, "Check'd like a bondman." See also 2 Henry IV. i. ii. 220.

69. tax'd for] blamed for. Cf. "he would not have taxed Milton for his choice of a supernatural argument." (Dryden.)

70. That . . . furnish] "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house, whence I came out. And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished." In the same way Shakespeare speaks of the spirit or mind being furnished. As in Lear (iii. i. 29) furnishings mean appendages (that are not essential). The Countess prays for any superfluous gift that heaven may be ~~willing~~ to confer to embellish Bertram's character. In the same line "pluck" may be taken in its strong sense: "a team of horse shall not pluck that from me" (Two Gentlemen of Verona, iii. i. 266). Or in its milder sense: "pluck a dainty doe to ground" (Titus Andronicus, ii. ii. 26). The former seems more forceful in this passage.

72. unseason'd] See note, line 49, above.

Laf. He cannot want the best that shall attend
His love.

Count. Heaven bless him! Farewell, Bertram. 75
[Exit.

Ber. [To Helena.] The best wishes that can be forged in your thoughts be servants to you! Be comfortable to my mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

Laf. Farewell, pretty lady: you must hold the credit 80 of your father. [Exit Bertram and Lafeu.

Hel. O! were that all. I think not on my father;
And these great tears grace his remembrance more Than those I shed for him. What was he like?
I have forgot him: my imagination 85

74. the best] Mr. Thiselton explains "the best advice," it being a compliment to the effect that he can have nothing to add to the excellent counsel the Countess has just given her son. The passage may be corrupt. Mr. Craig suggests "this lord" instead of "his love"—he who is a courtier in the service of this (feudal) lord cannot want the best. Mr. P. A. Daniel thinks that it is a case of punctuation—"He cannot want the best. That shall attend his love." The sense is not clear in the original, but the emendations are not quite convincing.

76. The best wishes . . .] Servants may here be used in the sense of lovers, as so frequently in the literature of chivalry. In that case the sentence would mean: May the best wishes you can frame for yourself fulfil your will as a lover would. Or else it is used in its straightforward sense as in Coriolanus, v. ii. 89, "my affairs are servanted to others." Mr. Thiselton takes this sentence to be spoken to the Countess.

77, 78. Be comfortable] be full of comfort. Cf. "I have another daughter who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable" (Lear, i. iv. 327). Also "comfortable friar" (Romeo and Juliet, v. iii. 148), and the "comfortable words."

80. hold] Helena has said, "I have a sorrow," i.e. for the loss of my father, as Lafeu must have understood it. In parting he says, "You must hold the grief, hold the credit of your father." Some take it to mean "uphold." The passage is difficult, but it seems more reasonable to suppose that Helena was told to hold (cherish, remember) her father's credit, rather than to uphold it—a thing she could hardly do. And Helena's next exclamation, "O, were that all!" seems to indicate that she understands Lafeu's remark as referring to her feelings. "I think not on my father."

82. O! were . . .] Helena sees them all go, with kind words of sympathy for her fatherless condition; she cannot help exclaiming, "how small a part of all my woe is that!"

83, 84. these . . . for him] These tears grace Bertram's remembrance more than those I shed for my father. The meaning of the his is not obscure when accentuated by a gesture.

Carries no favour in 't but Bertram's.
 I am undone: there is no living, none,
 If Bertram be away. 'Twere all one
 That I should love a bright particular star ✓ 10
 And think to wed it, he is so above me: 90
 In his bright radiance and collateral light
 Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.
 Th' ambition in my love thus plagues itself:
 The hind that would be mated by the lion
 Must die for love. 'Twas pretty, though a plague, 95
 To see him every hour; to sit and draw
 His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls, ✓
 In our heart's table; heart too capable
 Of every line and trick of his sweet favour:

88. 'Twere] Ff, It were Pope and Dyce. 89. particular] partic'lar Pope.
 90. me:] Rowe, above me In Ff. 96. hour; to sit] hour to sit Ff. 97. brows] browes F 1, 2; arrows F 3, 4. 98. our] my Collier (MS. notes).

86. favour] possibly a simile taken from the knight's custom of wearing his lady's favour or badge when fighting in a tourney. But perhaps the word merely means "face" as commonly.

91. radiance . . .] Steevens quotes Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 85, "from his radiant seat he rose Of high collateral glory." Cf. also Hamlet, iv. v. 206, "If by direct or by collateral hand they find us touch'd . . ." Here it means light emanating from a different sphere.

97. hawking] adjective, like the words charm-ing, middl-ing.

98. table] Malone explains this as "meaning 'picture,' French tableau." Boswell quotes the following in confirmation: "— he has a strange aspect, And looks much like the figure of a hangman In a table of the passion."

98. capable] ready to receive the impress of. See below, i. i. 215, "So thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel." The word capable refers to any kind of power or ability to assume a thing as in the sense of inheriting a thing. Cf. Lear, ii. i. 87, "And of my land, loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means to make thee capable." See Mr. Craig's note on this passage in Lear. Also Hamlet, iii. iv. 127.

99. line and trick] See King John, i. i. 85, "he hath a trick of Cœur de Lion's face." Line is often used by Shakespeare meaning "lineament." It is more especially the outline. See also 1 Henry IV, v. ii. 11. In Lear, iv. vi. 108, we find "the trick of that voice." Trick means "characteristic"—something not in the "line." The Cambridge editors in their note on King John, i. i. 85, quote a note by Wilbraham. "Trick is a term in Heraldry for a copy." In the Gentleman's Magazine (1803, Sup. p. 1207), in an account of various memorandums of receipts and expenditures (etc.) by some one at the latter end of the seventeenth century,

But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy 100
Must sanctify his relics. Who comes here?

Enter PAROLLES.

[Aside.] One that goes with him: I love him for his sake;

And yet I know him a notorious liar,
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these fix'd evils sit so fit in him, 105
That they take place, when virtue's steely bones

102. Aside] Cambridge editors, omitted Ff. 106. steely] seeley Badham, stately Cartwright conj.

are the following: "July 21st, 1691, Receiv'd of Mr. Cole for a trick of Consum's Arms, 2s. 6d.; July 25th, Mr. Martyn the Paynter for a trick of Lady Cath. Darnley's Arms, 2s. 6d.; Dec. 18th, Received of Mr. Gentry for a trick of Wyatt's Arms, 2s. 6d."

99. favour] countenance; as below, v. iii. 49, "Contempt . . . Which warp'd the line of every other favour."

101. sanctify his relics] relics or reliques = remembrance. See below, v. iii. 25, "The nature of his great offence is dead, And deeper than oblivion we do bury The incensing relics of it." Is this echo merely a chance one?

104. a great way] Cf. Julius Cæsar, II. i. 107, "Here the sun arises, which is a great way growing on the south, weighing the youthful season of the year."

104. solely a coward] entirely; a sheer coward. Boswell compares this use of "solely" with "only." Cf. Cupid's Revenge, "she being only wicked." Rolfe quotes Macbeth, I. v. 71, "Solely sovereign sway."

106. take place] are noticeable (?). Schmidt says, "are received as equals, in high society." Cowden Clarke gives

"precedence" as the meaning. Mr. Thirlston's note is admirable: "evidently signifies more than it would at the present day. In Utopia we read, 'The whiche two vices of affection and avarice, where they take place in judgements' . . . (original Latin, sicubi incubuere iudiciis) . . . where Robinson, to judge by his usual practice, would have amplified, if 'take place' had not adequately represented the Latin. We may, therefore, conclude that 'take place' may mean 'take up their quarters.'"

106. steely bones] "steel-boned, unyielding, uncomplying virtue" (Schmidt). Steely is only used once elsewhere by Shakespeare: "the steely point of Clifford's lance" (3 Henry VI. II. iii. 16). Bones might here be a singular noun meaning body; in which case "looks" of the Ff would be correct. Badham reads "seely bones." Does he understand a reference to "funny-bone," which was often called "crazy-bone," but not, so far as I am aware, "silly-bone"? It seems somewhat difficult to accept the explanation "when virtue's silly bones look bleak in the cold wind," meaning "out at elbow."

Look bleak i' th cold wind : withal, full oft we see Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

Par. Save you, fair queen !

Hel. And you, monarch !

110

Par. No.

Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity ?

Hel. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in you ; let me ask you a question. Man is enemy to virginity ; how may we barricado it against him ?

115

Par. Keep him out.

Hel. But he assails ; and our virginity, though valiant, in the defence yet is weak. Unfold to us some warlike resistance.

120

Par. There is none : man, setting down before you, will undermine you and blow you up.

106, 107 bones Look] Rowe, bones Lookes Ff, bone Looks Bulloch conj. ; i' th Ff, in the Pope. Hudson suggests omitting "cold" and Pope "withal." Kinnear instead of "wind withal" would write "wind without." 108. Cold] S. Walker thinks that this word is corrupt (Crit. Ex. iii. 71), perhaps "Poor." 117, 118. Keep him out. Hel. But] Keep him out ? Hel. For he Ham- mer. 118. assails ;] assails us ; S. Walker conj. (Crit. Ex. ii. 263). 121. setting] sitting Johnson.

107. withal] therewith.

108. Cold . . . folly] cold for naked ; superfluous for overclothed (Warburton). Poor wisdom waiting on too rich folly. Dyce quotes, "our basest beggars are in the poorest things superfluous" (Lear, II. iv. 268). S. Walker would read "Poor" instead of "Cold," and take the first cold (cold wind) to be an interpolation : the whole passage to run, " . . . That they take place, when virtue's silly bone Looks bleak i' th' wind : withal, full oft we see Poor wisdom waiting on superfluous folly."

110. monarch] perhaps an allusion to that "vain fantastical man" called Monarcho (cf. Armado in Love's Labour's Lost).

114 some stain] "some qualities, at least superficial" (Johnson). Cf. Troilus and Cressida, I. ii. 26, "there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of, nor any man an attain but he carries some stain of it."

121. setting down] laying siege. "All places yield to him ere he sets down" (Coriolanus, IV. vii. 28). Mr. Thielton quotes the following passages from Euphues : "And though women have small force to overcome men by reason, yet have they good fortune to undermine them by policie. The soft dropes of raine perce hard Marble, many strokes overthrow the tallest Oke, a silly woman in time may make such a breach into a man's heart, as hir

Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers and blowers up! Is there no military policy, how virgins might blow up men? 125

Par. Virginity being blown down, man will quicklier be blown up: marry, in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made, you lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth of nature to preserve virginity. Loss of 130 virginity is rational increase, and there was never ✓ virgin got till virginity was first lost. That you were made of is metal to make virgins. Virginity, by being once lost, may be ten times found: by being ever kept, it is ever lost. 'Tis too cold 135 a companion: away with 't!

131. rational] national Hanmer (Theobald conj.), natural Anon. conj. (ap. Halliwell). 132. got] F 2, goe F 1.

teares may enter without resistance'—which seems to fix the meanings of 'blowne downe.' 'Blowne up' means made to spring into 'bloom,' and also inflated with victory, and in fact all possible meanings of 'blow up' and 'blow down' are intended in the course of the passage. Parolles' remarks on virginity seem to have been suggested by the conversation between Ferardo and Lucilla in Euphues, from which the following is extracted. 'But this grieveth me most, that thou art almost vowed to the wayne order of the vestal virgins, disspising, or at least not desiring the sacred bandes of Juno hir bedde. If thy mother had bene of that minde when she was a mayden, thou haddest not nowe bene borne, to be of this minde to be a virgin. Way with thy selfe what slender profit they bring to the common wealth, what slight pleasure to themselves, what great grief to their parents, which joy most in their off-spring, and desire most to enjoy the noble and blessed name of a graundfather. Thou knowest . . . that the woman that maketh hir selfe barren by not marrying, is accounted amonge the Grecian Ladyes worse than a carryon, as Homer reporteth': and again, 'that honourable estate of Matrimony, which was sanctified in Paradise, allowed of the Patriarches, hallowed of the olde Prophets, and commended of all persons'' (ed. Mond, vol. i. p. 229, etc.).

129. city] a maid's innocence. Malone quotes the Lover's Complaint: "And long upon these terms I held my city Till thus he 'gan besiege me." And the Rape of Lucrece: "This made in him more rage, and lesser pity To make the breach and enter this sweet city."

131. rational] reasonable. Cf. Glanville's Scopis: "When the conclusion is deduced from the unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational."

Hel. I will stand for 't a little, though therefore I die a virgin.

Par. There's little can be said in 't; 'tis against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity 140 'is to accuse your mothers, which is most infallible disobedience. He that hangs himself is a virgin: virginity murders itself, and should be buried in highways out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offendress against nature. Virginity 145 breeds mites, much like a cheese, consumes itself to the very paring, and so dies with feeding his own stomach. Besides, virginity is peevish, proud, idle, made of self-love, which is the most inhibited sin in the canon. Keep it not; you 150 cannot choose but lose by 't. Out with 't! within one year it will make itself two, which is

147. paring] Rowe; payring F 1, 2. 152. one year . . . two] Grant White and Dyce; ten years (years or years) . . . two Ff; ten months . . . two Singer; the year . . . two Anon. conj. and Delius; ten year . . . ten Cambridge editors and Globe edition; two years . . . two Collier, ed. 2 (Steevens conj.); ten years . . . twelve Tollet conj.

137. stand for 't] fight for 't. Shylock in the court of judgment says, "I stand for judgment . . . I stand for law." See also Winter's Tale, III. ii. 46, "for honour 'Tis a derivative from me to mine; And only that I stand for."

140. on the part of] side, party. "My father came on the part of York" (Henry VI. II. v. 66). "I'll fight against the part I come with" (Cymbeline, v. i. 25).

142. He that hangs . . .] he that commits suicide is like a virgin: both put an end to their own existence. (Malone.)

144. sanctified limit] Cf. Harrison, Description of England, II. chap. ii., "such as kill themselves are buried in the field with a stake through their bodies" (W. J. C.).

150. inhibited] forbidden. "a practiser of arts inhibited and out of warrant" (Othello, I. ii. 79).

150. in the canon] Cf. Hamlet, I. ii. 131, "O, that the Everlasting had not fixed His canon 'gainst self-slaughter"

151. Out with 't] not the same as "Keep it not." It implies giving or putting a thing out to interest. (Malone compares Tempest, III. iii. 48.) The idea is borne out by the subsequent words of Parolles.

152. within . . . two] The Ff have within ten . . . two. A famous crux. Sir Th. Hanmer's emendation has been adopted by the Cambridge editors and in a goodly increase, and the principal itself not much the worse. Away with 't!

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking? 155

Par. Let me see: marry, ill, to like him that ne'er it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the gloss with ✓ lying; the longer kept, the less worth: off with
't while 'tis vendible; answer the time of request. 160
Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion; richly suited, but unsuitable: just like the brooch and the toothpick, which wear not now. Your date is better in your pie and your porridge than in your cheek: and your 165 virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French withered pears; it looks ill, it eats drily; marry, 'tis a withered pear; it was formerly* 157, 158. it likes] likes it S. Walker conj. (Crit. Ex. ii. 248). 163. wear] Capell, were Ff, we wear Rowe.

the Globe edition; Malone's arguments in favour of this reading are forcible. But if the editors of the later folios changed the "yeare" of the first Folio because of the "ten yeare," editors who give "ten years" accept the emendation of the later folios, which is at least disputable. To suppose, as Grant White does, that the 1623 folio printed "ten," by mistake instead of "one" is certainly the simplest and perhaps the safest way of taking thus much discussed passage.

157. to like . . .] to love the man who puts an end to virginity.

157, 158. it likes] in all probability "it" is accusative governed by "likes," i.e. that ne'er likes it. S. Walker would change the text to "likes it."

159. lying] as in Taming of the Shrew, ii. 330, "'Twas a commodity lay fretting by you."

163. toothpick] probably first used in Italy, and at one time only used in England by those who affected foreign customs Cf. "your traveller, he and his toothpick at my worship's mess" (John, i. i. 190).

163, 164. wear not now] are not the fashion. Cf. "Motley's the only wear" (As You Like It, ii. vii. 34). "Any toys for your head of the newest and finest wear" (Winter's Tale, iv. iv. 327).

164. date] There is a pun here on the two meanings of date (a fruit, time of life), not quite clear, because dates are no longer "the candied fruit much used" for pastry and other dishes. Cf. Troilus and Cressida, i. ii. 280, "And then to be bak'd with no date in the pie, for then the man's date is out." (Steevens.)

better; marry, yet 'tis a withered pear. Will you any thing with it?

170

Hel. Not my virginity yet. . . .

There shall your master have a thousand loves,

A mother, and a mistress, and a friend,

A phoenix, captain, and an enemy,

169. yet] yes Hammer. 170. with it?] with me? Johnson conj.; with us? Tyrwhitt conj.; with it? We are for the Court Staunton conj. 171. yet . . .] yet Ff; Not . . . yet . . .] No '—my virginity ' yet There shall its Jackson conj.; Hamner suggests "yet. You're for the court."

169. yet 'tis] Hamner suggests "yes," which is quite a likely reading. Cf. Cymbeline, "Faith, yes." But probably "yet" is here used meaning "now." He has just said, "it was formerly better; marry, now 'tis a withered pear." The word "yet" is frequently used in this sense (cf. Coriolanus, iv. iii. 5, iv. v. 69, etc.).

169, 170. Will you any thing with it?] A common expression in the sixteenth century, conveying no particular signification beyond a certain saucy flippancy, like our modern "if you wish to know," "so now you know." Cf. Hale's Criminal Cases cited by Mr. Froude in his History of England (i. p. 181, ed. 1). "The apparitor of the Bishop of London went with a citation into the shop of a mercer . . . 'Who does cite me?' asked the mercer. 'Marry, that do I,' answered the apparitor, 'if thou wilt anything with it'—Whereupon . . . (the said mercer) did snatch up his virga—Anglice, his yard—and did pursue the apparitor into the public streets, and, after multiplying of many blows, did break the head of the said apparitor." (Dyce.)

171. Not . . . yet . . .] Something must have been lost here, perhaps several lines. I sympathise with Johnson, who said, "I know not what to do with the passage." If the abrupt stop at "yet" is not due to the omission of something, there might conceivably have been a mistake about the parts:

the Page may have entered in the middle of Helena's sentence. But that means recasting the whole passage, which is quite impossible. The next few lines may be looked upon as an example of dramatic prophecy—by means of which the subject is constantly kept before us. Cf. lower down, i. ii. 72, where the King says, "If he were living, I would try him," suggesting to us that he will try the daughter.

173. mother] Dr. Herford suggests that "this word is perhaps the same as 'mauther,' an old provincial word for a young girl or maid . . . Cf. Ben Jonson's Alchemist, ed. H. C. Hart, iv. 4, 641. 'Away! You talk like a foolish mauther.' It was sometimes written modder . . . and, as Brome has it, with an evident quibble, 'Where maids are mothers, and mothers are maids.'" According to Nares the word is still used in Norfolk and Suffolk. Doubtful in this passage.

174. captain] All these terms are often used as epithets of endearment. Cf. Winter's Tale, i. ii. 122, where Leontes says to young Mamillius, "Come, captain, we must be neat . . ."; and in the same scene Polixenes, speaking of his son, says, "He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter; Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy; My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all." (Malone.) Steevens's note is to the point: "Our ancient writers delighted in catalogues, and always characterised love by contrarieties."

A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign, 175
 A counsellor, a traitress, and a dear;
 His humble ambition, proud humility,
 His jarring, concord, and his discord, dulcet,
 His faith, his sweet disaster; with a world
 Of pretty fond-adoptious christendoms, 180
 That blinking Cupid gossips. Now shall he—
 I know not what he shall. God send him well!
 The court's a learning-place, and he is one—

Par. What one, i' faith?

Hel. That I wish well. 'Tis pity— 185

Par. What's pity?

Hel. That wishing well had not a body in 't,
 Which might be felt; that we, the poorer born,
 ✓ Whose baser stars do shut us up in wishes,
 Might with effects of them follow our friends, 190

179. His faith, his] His faithless Hanmer.
 conj. (adopted by Dyce), fond-adoptious 1f.

180. fond-adoptious] S. Walker

179. faith, his sweet] Hanmer conjectured 'faithless sweet.' But how can we change a passage that is meant to be nonsense?

180. fond-adoptious christendoms] adopted names of love. This use of the word christendom to signify "christian name" seems rare. Malone quotes an instance from Nash in Four Letters Confuted: "But for an author to renounce his christendom to write in his owne commendation, to refuse the name his godfather and godmothers gave him in baptism. . . ." No other instance of the word "adoptious" is known.

181. gossips] verb, used in the old sense of acting as sponsor. The change of meaning had perhaps already begun in Shakespeare's time, for we find him using the word with reference to the women who waited on mothers during childbirth. It is Cupid who gives these "fond-adoptious christendoms."

189. baser stars] base as belonging to the poorer born = the base. "Our basest beggars are in the poorest things superfluous" (Lear, II. iv. 267). "And base things of the world and things which are despised hath God chosen" (1 Cor. i. 28).

190. with] with the, wi' th'. (Herrford.)

190. with effects] An effect is the result or fulfilment of a wish or purpose. "Do not look upon me, Lest with this piteous action you convert My stern effects" (Hamlet, III. iv. 129). "Thoughts are but dreams till their effects be tried" (Lucrece, 353). "Our wishes may prove effects" (Lear, IV. ii. 15).

And show what we alone must think, which never Returns us thanks.

Enter a Page.

Page. Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you. [Exit.

Par. Little Helen, farewell: if I can remember thee,
I will think of thee at court. 195

Hel. Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a charitable star.

Par. Under Mars, I.

Hel. I especially think, under Mars.

Par. Why under Mars? 200

Hel. The wars have so kept you under, that you must needs be born under Mars.

Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde, I think rather.

Par. Why think you so? 205

Hel. You go so much backward when you fight.

Par. That's for advantage.

Hel. So is running away, when fear proposes the safety: but the composition, that your valour and fear makes in you is a virtue of a good wing, 210 and I like the wear well.

Par. I am so full of businesses, I cannot answer thee acutely. I will return perfect courtier; in the

201. wars have] Pope; warres hath F 1, 2; waters hath F 3, 4; waters have Rowe. 211. I like the] is like to Mason conj. 212. businesses] business F 4.

191. show] as in the phrases, show pity, show justice.

191. alone must think] must only think.

209. composition] cf. iv. iii. 18, below.

211. I like the wear] Mason suggests "and is like to wear well." See note on line 163.

which my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of, a courtier's 215 counsel, and understand what advice shall thrust upon thee; else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away: farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, remember thy 220 friends. Get thee a good husband, and use him: as he uses thee: so farewell. [Exit.

Hel. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie

✓ Which we ascribe to heaven: the fated sky
Gives us free scope; only doth backward pull 225
Our slow designs when we ourselves are dull.
What power is it which mounts my love so high,
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye?
The mightiest space in fortune nature brings
To join like likes, and kiss like native things. 230

220. none,] money, William's conj. 229. The mightiest space] The widest apart Staunton conj., Through mightiest space Johnson; fortune nature] nature fortune Rann (Malone conj.); brings] springs Anon. conj. (Fras. Mag., 1853). 230. To join like likes] Likes to join likes Johnson conj., Like to join like Long MS.

214. naturalize] teach. Cf. South, "He rises fresh to his hammer and anvil; custom has naturalized his labour to him."

215. capable of] See article on line 98, above.

218. makes thee away] makes away with thee. "So in thyself thyself art made away" (Venus and Adonis, 763). "Three score year would make the world away" (Sonnets, xi. 8).

220. none] no leisure? absolute nonsense. Perhaps Parolles is meant to be talking nonsense. If not, Williams's conjecture that "none" is a misprint for "money" is almost certainly right.

224. fated] fateful. Cf. "The plagues hang fated o'er men's faults" (Lear, iii. iv.).

227. high] Bertram's rank high as compared with hers.

229, 230. brings To] succeeds in making. "I cannot bring my tongue to such a pace" (Coriolanus, ii. iii. 56). Malone paraphrases, "The affections given us by nature often unite persons between whom fortune or accident has placed the greatest distance or disparity, and causes them to join, like likes (instar parium) like persons in the same situation or rank of life." Mr. Thielton quotes: "So that I fear they do but bring Extreams to touch, and mean one thing" (Jonson's The Sad Shepherd, i. v.).

Impossible be strange attempts to those
 That weigh their pains in sense, and do suppose What hath been cannot be. Who ever strove
 To show her merit that did miss her love?
 The king's disease—my project may deceive me, 235
 But my intents are fix'd and will not leave me. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

*Flourish of cornets. Enter the KING, with letters ;
 Lords and others attending.*

King. The Florentines and Senoys are by th' ears ;
 Have fought with equal fortune, and continue
 A braving war.

233. hath . . . be] hath not been can't be Hanmer, ha'n't been cannot be Masoh conj., n'ath been cannot be Staunton conj., hath been can but be Bulloch conj. Perhaps, "What hath not, cannot, be."

The anonymous conjecture in the Fras. Mag., 1853, substituting "springs" for "brings" is good. But it is not a suggestion to adopt.

231. Impossible] inconceivable. "And what impossibility would slay In common sense, sense saves another way" (II. i. 178, below). Here again Mr. Thielston very aptly quotes from Euphuus: "Neither am I so wedded to the world that I should be moved with great possessions, neither so bewitched with wantonnesse, that I should be entysed with any mans proportion, neither if I were so disposed would I be so proude, to desire one of noble progenie, or so precise to choose one onely of mine owne countrey, for that commonly these things happen alwayes to the contrary. Doe we not see the noble to match with the base, the rich with the poore, the Italian oftentimes with the Portingale? As love knoweth no lawes, so it regardeth no conditions; and as the lover maketh no pawse where he lyketh, so he maketh no conscience of these idle ceremonies."

233. What hath been] One is tempted to adopt Hanmer's suggestion, "What ha'n't been." There is, as editors have not been slow to point out, plenty of sense to be wrung out of "What hath been cannot be." But it is so unusual a phrase, whereas "What ha'n't been cannot be" is what one would expect.

Scene II.

1. Senoys] natives of Siena, distant from Florence about thirty miles. Paynter spells the word "Senois." Boccaccio calls them "Sanesi."

1 by th' ears] quarrel. "Were half to half the world by th' ears . . ." (Coriolanus, I. i. 237). The metaphor is taken from fighting animals and in old writers the commonest form is "go together by the ears" (W. J. C.).

3. braving] Cf. "in braving arms against thy sovereign" (Richard II. II. III. 112).

First Lord. So 'tis reported, sir.

King. Nay, 'tis most credible: we here receive it
A certainty, vouch'd from our cousin Austria, 5
With caution, that the Florentine will move us
For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend Prejudicates the business, and would seem'
To have us make denial.

First Lord. His love and wisdom,
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead 10
For amplest credence.

King. He hath arm'd our answer,
And Florence is denied before he comes:
Yet, for our gentlemen that mean to see
The Tuscan service, freely have they leave
To stand on either part.

Second Lord. It well may serve  15
A nursery to our gentry, who are sick
For breathing and exploit.

King. What's he comes here?

Enter BERTRAM, LAFEU, and PAROLLES.

First Lord. It is the Count Rousillon, my good lord, Young Bertram.

18. Count Rousillon] Pope, Count Rosignoll F 1.

4. credible] the first lord has just qualified the King's statement by saying, "So 'tis reported," and the King answers, "it is credible," i.e. certainly trustworthy, reliable.

5. cousin] a title among princes. Mr. Craig tells me that in the North of Ireland they say of an arrogant person, "he would not call the King his cousin."

6. move us] ask us.

10. Approv'd so] proved, made evident by proof. See below, line 50, "So in approof lives not his epitaph As in your royal speech."

16. nursery] original meaning, a place for satisfying hunger.

17. breathing] activity. See below, 11. III, 259, "I think thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee." We say, "let off steam."

- King.* Youth, thou bear'st thy father's face ;
 Frank nature, rather curious than in haste, 20
 Hath well compos'd thee. Thy father's moral parts
 May'st thou inherit too ! Welcome to Paris.
- Ber.* My thanks and duty are your majesty's.
- King.* I would I had that corporal soundness now,
 As when thy father and myself in friendship 25
 First tried our soldiership ! He did look far Into the service of the time and was Discipled of the bravest : he lasted long ;
 But on us both did haggish age steal on,
 And wore us out of act. It much repairs me 30
 To talk of your good father. In his youth
 He had the wit, which I can well observe 'To-day in our young lords ; but they may jest
 Till their own scorn return to them unnoted

21. well compos'd thee] compos'd thee well Pope.

20. curious] Mr. Craig in his note on the word "curiosity" (Lear, i. i. 6, etc.) gives "a man must not go too hastily to it (shooting with the bow), for that is rashness, nor yet make too much to do about it, for that is curiosity." (Ascham, Toxophilus, Arbor, p. 147), ". . . Who overthrew himself in his doings, not so much for lack of reasonable skill of Warres, as through his unprofitable curiositie and strictness in observing the law." The word curious occurs in Ex. xxviii. 8, "The curious (=embroidered) girdle of the ephod." Ps. cxxxix., "I was made in secret, and curiously wrought."

21. Hath] This word is suspiciously like an interpolation — the repetition of the word "haste" at the end of the preceding line.

26. He did look far] was a man who had seen much active service.

28 Discipled of] taught by.

30. act] activity or power to take part in action.

33. they may jest] "your father (says the King) had the same airy flights of satirical wit with the young lords of the present time, but they do not what he did, hide their unnoted levity in honour, cover petty faults with great merit." Johnson, whose paraphrase this is, considers it "an excellent observation. Jocose follies, and slight offences, are only allowed by mankind in him that overpowers them by great qualities." There is an old saying: "young men are subtle arguers: the cloak of honour covers all their faults, as that of passion all their follies."

Ere they can hide their levity in honour. 35
 So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness
 Were in his pride or sharpness; if they were,
 His equal had awak'd them; and his honour,
 Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak, and at this time 40
 His tongue obey'd his hand: who were below him
 He us'd as creatures of another place,
 And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks,
 Making them proud of his humility,
 In their poor praise he humbled. Such a man 45
 Might be a copy to these younger times,
 Which, followed well, would demonstrate them now
 But goes backward.

Ber.

His good remembrance, sir,

35. in honour] in humour Long MS (and independently Dyce conj.). 35,
 36. honour. So . . . courtier] honour So like a courtier Ff. 42. of another place] of a brother race Hammer, of a nobler place Williams conj. 44. proud of proud, and Warburton (Williams conj.). 45. In . . . humbled] be-humbled Staunton conj., He, in . . . praise, humbled Becket conj., praise the humbler
 Williams conj. (reading line 44 with Warburton); perhaps so humbled.

35. in honour] Long MS. and Dyce read "humour." I see no reason.

36. So like a courtier] Sir William Blackstone suggested placing a colon after "courtier," and was followed by Capell, Rolfe, and others. Johnson, accepting no emendation, paraphrases "He was so like a courtier that there was in his dignity of manner nothing contemptuous, and in his keenness of wit nothing bitter. If bitterness or contemptuousness ever appeared, they had been awakened by some injury, not of a man below him, but of his equal."

39. true] proper. Cf. "truepenny," and below, II. v. 6, "my dial goes not true."

40. Exception] disapproval. The same word is used in Hamlet, v. ii. 241;

"What I have done That might your nature, honour and exception Roughly awake."

41. his hand] the clock's hand.

42. of another place . . .] perhaps "strangers, men to whom it was necessary to be courteous." The passage is obscure. "Another place" is strange, Williams's conjecture "nobler place" seems better, but hardly right. Perhaps "an other place" means "an equal place" in the sense of "second and equal," as when "other" is used with "the." Perhaps instead of "he humbled" we might read "so humbled." Malone explains the construction as being equivalent to "he being humbled in their poor praise." Williams tries to escape the difficulty by reading "in their poor praise the humbler."

Lies richer in your thoughts than on his tomb;
 So in approof lives not his epitaph 50
 As in your royal speech.

King. Would I were with him! He would always say,— Methinks I hear him now: his plausible words
 He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them,
 To grow there and to bear;—"Let me not live,"— 55
 "Thus his good melancholy oft began,
 On the catastrophe and heel of pastime,
 When it was out,—“Let me not live,” quoth he,
 "After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff
 Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses 60
 All but new things disdain; whose judgments are

56. Thus] Pope, This Ff. 58. it] wit Staunton conj.; was] wears Kinnear conj. (putting line 56 in a parenthesis).

50. So in approof] "His epitaph lives fit better in your royal speech than it could in the remembrance of posterity." Approvers were men who tried the accused; and the verb "approve" is used in the sense of increasing or supporting a reputation: as in "if you did, it would not much approve me" (Hamlet, v. ii. 141) (Dyce). Bertram means that the King's words give life to the epitaph which as a rule can only live in the judgment (approof) of posterity. Cf. "of very valiant approof" (II. v. 3, below). "and as my farthest band Shall pass on thy approof" (Antony and Cleop. III. ii. 27).

53. plausible] pleasing; as in Hamlet, I. iv. 30, "his plausible manners."

54. scatter'd not in ears] Knight quotes: "Grant, we beseech Thee, . . . that the words which we have heard with our outward ears may . . . be so grafted inwardly in our hearts, that they may bring forth the fruit of good living." [The Book of Common Prayer. The Communion.]

57. catastrophe . . . heel] both words mean "end." "When April on the heel of limping winter treads" (Romeo and Juliet, I. ii. 27).

58. out] Staunton conjectured "wit," evidently unable to get any meaning out of the passage as it stands. Most editors have, I believe, taken the "it" to refer to "pastime"—"when the pastime was over." It might also refer to "melancholy"—and the "was out" would then mean being at a loss for something to say (down in the mouth). "Thus his good melancholy oft began . . . when it was out (of sorts)." Cf. Love's Labour's Lost, v. ii. 152, 165, 172; As You Like It, IV. i. 76, 82; Coriolanus, v. iii. 41.

59. snuff] Cf. Mal. i. 13, "Ye have snuffed at (my table), saith the Lord." The margin gives "whereas ye might have blown it away." Cf. also "Left like an unsavoury snuff Whose property is only to offend" (Jonson's Every Man in his Humour).

60. apprehensive] Falstaff says, "a good sherris-sack . . . makes the brain apprehensive, quick, forgetive (inventive)" (2 Henry IV. iii. 107). Shakespeare uses it several times in this sense.

Mere fathers of their garments ; whose constancies
Expire before their fashions." This he wish'd :

I, after him, do after him wish too,

Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home, 65

I quickly were dissolved from my hive,

To give some labourers room.

Second Lord.

You are lov'd, sir ;

They that least lend it you shall lack you first.

King. I fill a place, I know 't. How long is 't, count,

Since the physician at your father's died ? 70

He was much fam'd.

Ber.

Some six months since, my lord.

King. If he were living, I would try him yet.

Lend me an arm : the rest have worn me out

With several applications : nature and sickness

Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count ; 75

My son's no dearer.

Ber.

Thank your majesty.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter COUNTESS, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear : what say you of this gentlewoman ?

62. fathers] feathers Tyrwhitt conj., parcels Williams conj. 67. You are] Capell, You'r or You're Ff.

62. fathers of their garments] their judgments did nothing but give birth to new designs for clothes. Cf. 2 Henry IV. I. i. 8, "Every minute now Should be the father of some, stratagem" (Malone). Also, "Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought" (2 Henry IV. IV. v. 93). 66. dissolved] discharged. Cf. Merry Wives, v. v. 237.

Stew. Madam, the care I have had to even your content, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours; for then we wound our modesty and make foul the clearness of our deservings, when of ourselves we publish them. 5

Count. What does this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah; the complaints I have heard of you I do not all believe: 'tis my slowness that I do not; 10 for I know you lack not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knaveries yours.

Clo. 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow.

Count. Well, sir. 15

Clo. No, madam, 'tis not so well that I am poor, though many of the rich are damned. But, if I may have your ladyship's good will to go to the world, Isbel your woman and I will do as we may.

Count. Wilt thou needs be a beggar? 20

18. to go to] to go F 3, 4. 19. your] Badham, the Ff; and I will] F 2, 3, 4; and we will F 1; and we will Collier.

3. even] the transitive verb "even" is only twice used by Shakespeare. "But we'll even all that good time will give us" (Cymbeline, III. iv. 184). It is borrowed from the language of accountants, as Mr. Craig points out in his note on to make even in Lear, IV. vii. 80. Cotgrave has "egalier = to equall, even, levell, match." The meaning here is that the steward has had a care to make his endeavours balance with or even her wishes.

4. calendar] record (New Eng. Dict.). Bacon writes: "Shepherds of people had best know the calendars of tempests of state."

8. What . . . here?] The Steward beats about the bush, because he has the delicacy to shrink from making known his discovery to the Countess in the presence of a third party—and such a third party too! The word "publish" is a strong hint to her to dismiss the clown, which she promptly takes. The clown, however, makes the most of his privileges, and airs his wit before he goes. (A. E. Thiselton.)

11. commit them] a curious construction: but the meaning is clear.

18, 19. go to the world] be married. Cf. As You Like It, v. iii. 5. "Thus goes every one to the world but I" (Much Ado, II. i. 330).

19. do as we may] as best we can. Cf. Fitzherbert on Husbandry: after saying that a cowe gives more milk

Clo. I do beg your good will in this case.

Count. In what case?

Clo. In Isbel's case and mine own.' Service is no heritage; and I think I shall never have the blessing of God till I have issue o' my body, for they say barnes are blessings. 25

Count. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry.

Clo. My poor body, madam, requires it: I am driven on by the flesh; and he must needs go that the devil drives. 30

Count. Is this all your worship's reason?

Clo. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are.

Count. May the world know them?

Clo. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are; and indeed, I do marry that I may repent. 35

Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Clo. I am out o' friends, madam; and I hope to have friends for my wife's sake. 40

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

25. o' my body] Rowe (ed. 2), a my body Ff. 39. out o'] Capell; out a F 1, 2, 3; out of F 4.

when fed on grasse than on heye, he goes on, "But he that hath no pasture, must do as he may" (Skeat, 1882, p. 58). W. J. C.

23. Service . . .] a proverb. Golancz says, "the idea seems to be that if service is no blessing, children are." Mr. Craig pointed out to me a passage in the History of George a Greene Puckering (ed. 1827, p. 9), "he remembered himself of the . . . English proverb 'that service is no hermitage'" (sic). We may take it that he was trying to "remember himself" of our proverb.

26. barnes] old form of the word for children now spelled "bairns" in Scotland. Occurs several times in Shakespeare.

29, 30. he must . . . drives] proverbial.

32. holy reasons] reasons connected with religion. "Holy vows" occurs in A Lover's Complaint, 179.

Clo. You're shallow, madam; e'en great friends; for the knaves come to do that for me which I am aweary of. He that ears my land spares my team, and gives me leave to in the crop: if I be his cuckold, he's my drudge. He that comforts my wife is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherishes my flesh and blood loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend: ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend. If men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage; for young Charbon the puritan, and old Poysam the papist, howsomere their hearts are severed in religion, their heads are both one; they may jowl horns together, like any deer i' the herd. 45 50 55

Count. Wilt thou ever be a foul-mouthed and calumnious knave?

42. You're] Capell, Y'are Ff; e'en] Hanmer, in Ff. 53. Charbon . . . Poysam] see article below. 54. howsomere] F 4; how somere F 1, 2; how-someere F 3; howsoe'er Pope.

42. e'en] Malone adopted this change, thinking that "in great friends" was evidently a way of writing "e'en." The same spelling occurs in many other places in Shakespeare.

43. the knaves] the great friends. Knave=young fellow, servant.

44. ears] ploughs: frequently used by Shakespeare and the Bible translators.

45. in the crop] bring in the crop. Rolfe quotes Bacon, Henry VII., "All was inned at last into the King's barne." Holland's Pliny, "and when this is inned and laid up in the barne."

53. Charbon . . . Poysam] a reference to the lenten fare of puritan and papist. Malone is responsible for Poysam = Poisson. Benjamin Easy for Charbon = Charbonne; he adds, "Shakespeare has clearly appropriated . . . the old French proverb 'Jeune chair et viel poisson.' The full meaning intended to be conveyed is not that some, but that the best men, whatever their age or whatever may be their own or their wives' religion, all share the common fate." Malone understood "charbon" to be an allusion to the "fiery zeal of the puritan."

55. jowl] knock. Cf. "How the knave jowls it to the ground" (Hamlet, v. i. 84). The word also occurs in North's "P'lutarch" (Thesaurus), 2nd ed., 1595, p. 6.

Clo. A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way:

60

*For I the ballad will repeat
Which men full true shall find;
Your marriage comes by destiny,
Your cuckoo sings by kind.*

Count. Get you gone, sir: I'll talk with you more anon. 65

Stew. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you: of her I am to speak.

Count. Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman I would speak with her; Helen I mean. 70

Clo. *Was this fair face the cause, quoth she,
Why the Grecians sacked Troy?
Fond done, done fond,
Was this King Priam's joy?*

61-64.] Prose in the Ff; Rowe (ed. 2) first printed them as verse. 73. Fond done, done fond] omitted by Pope. 73, 74.] one line in Ff. After "fond done" Theobald (Warburton) inserts "for Paris he"; Capell conj. "but Paris he"; Collier, ed. 2 (MS) "good sooth, it was:"; Keightley "for only he"; Rann (Heath conj) "For it undone, undone, quoth he." 74. joy?] ioy, F 1, 2; joy. (Keightley, Rann, and several modern editors).

59. A prophet I] Warburton comments as follows: "It is a supposition, which has run through all ages and people, that natural fools have something in them of divinity. On which account they were esteemed sacred; travellers tell us in what esteem the Turks now hold them; nor had they less honour (! irony) paid them heretofore in France, as appears from the old word benet, for a natural fool."

60. next] nearest. Cf. "'Tis the next way to turn tailor" (1 Henry IV. III. i. 264). The phrase is still used in Warwickshire, according to Henley.

61. ballad] Steevens points out that it is to be found in John Grange's Garden (1577).

64. by kind] in the nature of. Cf. "the worm will do his kind" (Antony and Cleopatra, v. ii. 264).

71-80.] stanza of an old ballad: a few words must have been lost. There seems to be no chance of correcting it, until the original is found. A ballad, ent. sta. reg. 1585, The lamentation of Hecuba and the Ladies of Troy (Dr. Herford tells us), is lost. Warburton understood "ten" to refer to the ten sons of Priam.

With that she sighed as she stood, 75
With that she sighed as she stood,
And gave this sentence then ;
Among nine bad if one be good,
Among nine bad if one be good,
There's yet one good in ten. 80

Count. What! one good in ten? you corrupt the song, sirrah.

Clo. One good woman in ten, madam; which is a purifying o' the song. Would God would serve the world so all the year! we'd find no fault with the 85 tithe-women if I were the parson. One in ten, quoth a'! An we might have a good woman born but or every blazing star, or at an earthquake, 'twould mend the lottery well: a man may draw his heart out ere a' pluck one. 90

Count. You'll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you!

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done! Though honesty be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the 95

75. With . . . stood] With . . . stood, bis Ff. 76.] omitted in Ff and by Pope. 78-80] Prose in Ff; verse by Rowe (ed. 2). 84. o' the] Capell; alth' F 1, 2; a' th' F 3, 4. 88. or] Capell; ore F 1, 2; o're F 3, 4; o'er Rowe; omitted Pope; on Rann; ere Collier (ed. 1); one Collier (ed. 2) MS.; for Harness; 'fore Staunton. 90. draw] pray Rowe. 92. you 'I you? Ff. 93. woman's] F 1; a woman's F 2, 3, 4. 93, 94. and yet] F 1, 2; and get F 3, 4. 94, 95. no puritan] a puritan Rann (Tyrwhitt conj.).

88. or] Capell's version. "For" is a likely alternative, but I see no reason for changing the original. Or = before.

89. lottery well a] there may be a mistake in punctuation here. I prefer "lottery. Well, a . . ."

90. draw] Rowe suggests "pray." I take "draw" in connection with lottery. A man may go on drawing and drawing till he dies, and not draw a good woman.

94, 95.] Dr. Herford writes: "Though honesty be no puritan, yet it will act as the puritans do; it will comply with the law outwardly in token of its humility, etc. The allusion surplice of humility over the black gown of a big heart. I am going, forsooth: the business is for Helen to come hither. [Exit.

Count. Well, now.

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman 100 entirely.

Count. Faith, I do: her father bequeathed her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds: there is more owing her than is paid; and 105 more shall be paid her than she'll demand.

Stew. Madam, I was very late more near her than I think she wished me: alone she was, and did communicate to herself her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they 110 touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was; she loved your son: Fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates; Love, no god, that would not extend his might, only where qualities were level; Dian, 115 is to the controversy touching such things as kneeling at the Communion, the ring in marriage, and especially the use of the surplice as an official vestment in the public services of the church. This controversy was running very high in the poet's time; all men were interested in it; so that the allusion would be generally understood. The puritans abominated the surplice as a rag of iniquity, and were great sticklers for the black gown, which was to them the symbol of Calvinism. Some of them, however, yielded so far as to wear the surplice over the gown, because their consciences would not suffer them to officiate without the latter, nor the law of the church without the former."

115, 116. level; Dian, no queen] Globe ed. (Theobald's emendation); levell, Queene F 1, 2; levell Queen F 3, 4; level; . . . queen Cambridge Edd. (thinking it probable that something more has been omitted, perhaps a whole line of the MS.).

96. big] proud.

115. qualities] rank. "Gentlemen of blood and quality" (Henry V. iv. viii. 95).

115. Dian . . .] Theobald's well-known note runs as follows: "'Tis evident to every sensible reader that something must have slipped out here, by which the meaning of the context is rendered defective. The steward is speaking in the very words he overheard of the young lady; fortune was no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight surprised, without rescue in the first assault or ransom afterward. This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow that e'er I heard virgin exclaim in; which I held my duty 120 speedily to acquaint you withal, sithence in the loss that may happen, it concerns you something to know it.

Count. You have discharg'd this honestly; keep it to yourself. Many likelihoods inform'd me of this 125 before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe nor misdoubt. Pray you, leave me: stall this in your bosom; and I thank you for your honest care. I will speak with you further anon. [Exit Steward. 130

Count. ~~Even~~ so it was with me when I was young:

If ever we are nature's, these are ours; this thorn
Doth to our rose of youth rightly belong;

Our blood to us, this to our blood is born:

117. knight surprised] knight to be surprised Rowe.

no goddess, she said, for one reason; love, no god, for another;—what could she then more naturally subjoin, than as I have amended in the text: 'Diana, no queen . . .' For in poetical history, Diana was, as well known to preside over chastity, as Cupid over love, or Fortune over the change or regulation of our circumstances." Boswell adds that "Diana's knight" is elsewhere used meaning "a virgin."

117. surprised] to be surprised. Dyce quotes Greene's Penelope's Web (1601), "suffering the princesse injury unrevenged." Dr. Herford quotes Drayton's Harmonie of the Church (1591), "suffer not their mouthes shut up, O Lord!"

119. touch] just above we have had "she thought (her words) touched not any stranger sense." Cf. also, "Did'st thou but know the inly touch of love" (Two Gentlemen, II. vii. 18). It is somewhat differently used in the expression, "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," where the presence of the word nature makes it convey the sense of weakness.

121. sithence] sith, since.

128. stall] Shakespeare does not elsewhere use this word with a metaphorical sense.

133. rose of youth] "tell him he wears the rose Of youth upon him" (Antony and Cleopatra, III. xiii. 20).

134. Our blood to us] "This thorn is

It is the show and seal of nature's truth, 135
 Where love's strong passion is impress'd in youth:
 By our remembrances of days foregone,
 Such were our faults; or then we thought them none.

Enter HELENA.

Her eye is sick on 't: I observe her now.

Hel. What is your pleasure, madam? 140

Count. You know, Helen, I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honourable mistress.

Count. Nay, a mother:

Why not a mother? When I said "a mother,"
 Methought you saw a serpent: what's in "mother"
 That you start at it? I say, I am your mother; 145
 And put you in the catalogue of those
 That were enwombed mine: 'tis often seen
 Adoption strives with nature, and choice breeds
 A native slip to us from foreign seeds;
 You ne'er oppress'd me with a mother's groan, 150
 Yet I express to you a mother's care.
 God's mercy, maiden! does it curd thy blood
 To say I am thy mother? What's the matter,

139. Enter Helena] Singer. After line 130 in Ff. 141. You . . . you Capell divides into two lines ending Helen . . . to you. 142, 143. Nay, a mother . . . said "a mother,"] in one line in Ff.

as natural a thing as blood." Blood = passion. "The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps over a cold decree" (Merchant of Venice, I. ii. 19).

138. faults; or] Many editors have wanted to change this. It may stand; meaning "as far as we can remember those were our only faults—or, rather, we did not think them faults then."

139. on't] of't, as very often in Shakespeare.

149. native slip] choice breeds a slip (a grafting?) which becomes native to us, though sprung from foreign (stranger) seed.

That this distemper'd messenger of wet,
 The many-colour'd Iris, rounds thine eye ? 155
 Why? that you are my daughter?

Hel. That I am not.

Count. I say, I am your mother.

Hel. Pardon, madam ;
 The Count Rousillon cannot be my brother :
 I am from humble, he from honour'd name ;
 No note upon my parents, his all noble : 160
 My master, my dear lord he is ; and I
 His servant live, and will his vassal die.
 He must not be my brother.

Count. Nor I your mother?

Hel. You are my mother, madam : would you were,—
 So that my lord your son were not my brother,— 165 ~~Heard my~~ mother ! or were you both our mothers,
 I care no more for than I do for heaven,
 So I were not his sister. Can't no other,

163. mother?] Rowe (ed. 2), mother. Ff. 167. I care . . . heaven] I care no more for than you do, 'fore heaven Becket conj. ; I'd care e'en more for't than I do for heaven Keightley ; I care no more for than I do fear heaven Gould conj. ; Steevens adds [Aside] to the Ff reading.

154. distemper'd] contains an idea of "bad weather." Cf. King John, III. iv. 154, "No-distempere'd day."

155. Iris] Cf. As You Like It, III. ii. 393, "a blue eye and sunken"—one of Rosalind's marks of a lover. Cf. also Rape of Lucrece (1586), "And round about her tear-distained eye, Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky." Rounds=surrounds. ". . . That rounds the mortal temples of a king" (Dyce). There is a reference to the shadow round eyes that are in love or sorrowful.

166. both our] of us both. A common construction in Shakespeare. Cym- beline, v. v. 388, "your three motives" =the motives of you three. Marlowe writes, "I have sworn to frustrate both their hopes," and Sheridan, "Tell her 'tis all our ways."

167. I care . . . heaven] Some sense can undoubtedly be eked out of this line : but I take it to be corrupt. The most likely emendation seems to be, "I'd care more for it than I do for heaven, So I were not his sister." Or perhaps it means, "I fret about that as little as I do about heaven." "Careful hours"=hours full of care.

168. Can't no other] can it not be otherwise.

But, I your daughter, he must be my brother?

Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-law. 170

God shield you mean it not! daughter and mother

So strive upon your pulse. What! pale again?

My fear hath catch'd your fondness: now I see

The mystery of your loneliness, and find

Your salt tears' head: now to all sense 'tis gross 175

You love my son: invention is asham'd,

Against the proclamation of thy passion,

To say thou dost not: therefore tell me true;

But tell me then, 'tis so; for, look, thy cheeks

Confess it, th' one to th' other; and thine eyes 180

See it so grossly shown in thy behaviours,

That in their kind they speak it: only sin

And hellish obstinacy tie thy tongue,

That truth should be suspected. Speak, is it so?

If it be so, you have wound a goodly clew; 185

If it be not, forswear't: howe'er, I charge thee,

As heaven shall work in me for thine avail,

To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me!

Count. Do you love my son?

Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress!

174. loneliness] Theobald, loneliness Ff. 175, 176. gross You] grosse You Ff. 180. th' one to th' other] Knight; 'ton tooth to th' F 1; 'ton to th' F 2; 'tone to th' F 3, 4. 186. forswear't howe'er] forsweare't how ere F 1, 2. 187. thine] F 1; mine F 2, 3, 4. 188. truly] true Hamner.

174. loneliness] The Ff read *loueli-*ness. The correction was made on Lord Ellesmere's copy of the Folio—an emendation which has been accepted by most editors.

175. gross] palpable. Falstaff's lies were "like their father, gross as a mountain, open, palpable" (1 Henry IV. II. iv. 250).

181. grossly] conspicuously.

185. wound . . . clew] Cf. Proverbs of John Heywood (1546, Sharman, p. 118), "In being your own foe you spin a fayre thread." (W. J. C.)

Count. Love you my son?

Hel. Do not you love him, madam? 190

Count. Go not about; my love hath in't a bond,
Whereof the world takes note: come, come, disclose
The state of your affection, for your passions
Have to the full appeach'd.

Hel. Then, I confess,
Here on my knee, before high heaven and you, 195
That before you, and next unto high heaven,
I love your son.

My friends were poor, but honest; so's my love;
Be not offended, for it hurts not him
That he is lov'd of me: I follow him not 200
By any token of presumptuous suit;
Nor would I have him till I do deserve him;
~~Yet never~~ know how that desert should be.
I know I love in vain, strive against hope;
Yet in this captious and intenable sieve 205

196, 197.] As in Pope. Printed as one line in Ff. 205. captious] cap'cious Farmer (conj.), copious Jackson (conj.); intenable] intemible F 1.

194. appeach'd] informed against you. "I will appeach the villain" (Richard II. v. ii. 79). Also cf. Speed, Chronicle (1611, p. 620a), "he was openly appeach'd for treason."

198. friends] relations.

205. captious . . . sieve] The full stop after "sieve" in the Ff is clearly a misprint, and all seem agreed that "sieve" means "sieve." What "captious and intenable" means is not so easy to decide. Dr. Herford explains it: "apt to receive but not to hold." Malone takes "captious" to mean "recipient"; and "intenable" = incapable of holding. Farmer and Schmidt connect "captious" with "capacious." Rolfe supports Malone's interpretation. Singer would have us take "captious" in the sense of the Latin captiosus (deceptive). The allusion, he says, may be to the story of the Danaides, which has been thus moralised: "These Virgins, who in the flower of their age pour water into pierced vessels which they can never fill, what is it but to be always bestowing our love on the ungrateful?" The quotation is admirable; but I cannot think "captious" = captiosus. Cotgrave gives captieux = captious, cavilling, too curious, also cantelous. This seems to support the meaning "ungrateful," but not the meaning "deceitful."

I still pour in the waters of my love,
 And lack not to lose still. Thus, Indian-like,
 Religious in mine error, I adore
 The sun, that looks upon his worshipper,
 But knows of him no more. My dearest madam, 210
 Let not your hate encounter with my love
 For loving where you do: but if yourself,
 Whose aged honour cites a virtuous youth,
 Did ever in so true a flame of liking
 Wish chastely and love dearly, that your Dian 215
 Was both herself and Love: O! then, give pity
 To her, whose state is such, that cannot choose
 But lend and give where she is sure to lose;
 That seeks not to find that her search implies,
 But riddle-like, lives sweetly where she dies. 220

Count. Had you not lately an intent, speak truly.

To go to Paris?

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? tell true.

207. lack] reck Keightley conj. ; lose] F 4 ; loose F 1, 2, 3 ; love Tyrwhitt conj.
 214. liking] F 1 ; living F 2 ; loving F 3, 4. 223. Madam] omitted Hanmer ;
 224. tell true] omitted Steevens (conj.) ; S. Walker conjectures separate line.
 Dyce gives that reading and places "tell true" in a line by itself.

207. lose still] probably "I lack not (do not cease) to lose still more 'waters of love' vainly poured out."

213. aged honour cites] Malone explains: "whose respectable conduct in age shows or proves that you were no less virtuous when young." Cf. "The morning rise doth cite each moving sense from idle rest" (Pilgrim, 195). "I need not cite him to it" (Two Gentlemen, II. iv. 85). "It cites us, brother, to the field" (3 Henry VI. II. i. 34). I prefer to understand "cite" to mean "urge on"—your aged honour urges on (is a good example to) a well-disposed young person.

220. riddle-like] secretly, like a riddle. The foregoing lines seem to have suggested the simile. Cf. "Though like the pestilence and old-fashioned love, riddlingly it catch men, and doth remove never, till it be starved" (Donne).

222.] If these short sentences are to be arranged in verse at all I think Walker and Dyce have the right version: "To go to Paris? Hel. Madam I had. Count. Wherefore? || Tell true. || Hel. I will," etc. But

Hel. I will tell truth ; by grace itself I swear. 225

You know my father left me some prescriptions
Of rare and pfov'd effects, such as his reading
And manifest experience had collected
For general sovereignty ; and that he will'd me
In heedfull'st reservation to bestow them, 230
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note. Amongst the rest,
There is a remedy, approv'd, set down,
To cure the desperate languishings whereof
The king is render'd lost.

Count. This was your motive 235
For Paris, was it? Speak.

Hel. My lord your son made me to think of this ;
Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king,
'Had ~~from~~, the conversation of my thoughts
Haply been absent then.

Count. But tthink you, Helen, 240

225. tell truth] F 1; tell true F 2, 3, 4. 228. manifest] manifold Collier (ed. 2), Long MS. and Collier MS. and S. Walker (Crit. Ex. ii. 245). 231. notes] cures Gould conj. 235, 236. This . . .] Capell's arrangement. In one line in the folios. 236. it? Speak] Steevens; it, speak? Ff. 240. Haply] Pope, Happily Ff.

seeing that in this case we have an unfinished line it may be advisable to retain the Ff reading, though that broken line "Tell true" may imply the pause during which Helena hesitates and then suddenly replies, "I will tell truth . . ."

228. manifest] A doubtful reading. I like the emendation "manifold" (Coll. MS.). Manifest must mean, if anything, famous.

229. general sovereignty] universal remedy.

230. bestow them] lay up or stow. Cf. "And when he came to the Tower, he took them from their hand and bestowed them in the house" (2 Kings v. 24).

231. notes] "cures" is Gould's conjecture. Notes may be a misprint.

231. inclusive] including everything. 232. in note] written down. Perhaps "known."

233. approv'd] See note above, i. ii. 50.

235. render'd] represented. "I heard him speak of that same brother, and he did render him the most unnatural that liv'd 'mongst men" (As You Like It, iv. iii. 123).

If you should tender your supposed aid,
 He would receive it? He and his physicians
 Are of a mind; he, that they cannot help him,
 They, that they cannot help. How shall they credit
 A poor unlearned virgin, when the schools, 245
 Embowell'd of their doctrine, have left off
 The danger to itself?

Hel. There's something in't,
 More than my father's skill, which was the great'st
 Of his profession. That his good receipt Shall for my legacy be sanctified 250
 By the luckiest stars in heaven: and, would your honour
 But give me leave to try success, I'd venture
 The well-lost life of mine on his grace's cure
 By such a day and hour.

Count. Dost thou believe't?

Hel. Ay, madam, knowingly. 255

Count. Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave and love, Means and attendants, and my loving greetings
 To those of mine in court. I'll stay at home
 And pray God's blessing into thy attempt.
 Be gone to-morrow; and be sure of this, 260
 What I can help thee to, thou shalt not miss.

[Exeunt.]

247. itself?] Rowe, itself. Ff; in't] hints Hanmer (Warburton). 249. profession. That] profession, that Ff. 254. day and hour] day, an hour
 Ff. 257. attendants] attendance S. Walker conj.

243. help] cure. Cf. "It helps the mont and Fletcher, Rollo, II. ii.
 head-ache, cough and tissick" (Beau- Song).

ACT II

SCENE I.—Paris. The King's Palace.

Flourish. Enter the KING, with divers young Lords taking leave for the Florentine war; BERTRAM, PAROLLES, and Attendants.

King. Farewell, young lord: these warlike principles
Do not throw from you: and you, my lord, farewell:
Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain all,
The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis receiv'd,
And is enough for both.

First Lord. 'Tis our hope, sir, 5
After well enter'd soldiers, to return
And find your grace in health.

King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart

1, 2. lord] Hanmer, lords Ff. 3. both gain all] Johnson, both gain, all Ff. 5. First Lord] Rowe, Lord G. Ff.

young Lords] "Throughout this scene the two speakers whom Rowe and all subsequent editors have called 'First' and 'Second Lord' are called in the Ff 'Lord G.' and 'Lord E.' In all likelihood, as Capell has suggested, the parts were originally played by two actors whose names began respectively with G and E; and in fact, in the list of 'Principal Actors' prefixed to the first Folio we find the names of Gilburne, Goughe and Ecclestone. The same actors doubtless took the parts of the two gentlemen who bring the letter to Helena in the second Scene of Act III., and who in the stage-directions of the Folio are termed 'French G.' and 'French E.' The confusion of speakers in the dialogue at the close of III. vi. will be remedied if we suppose the Folio to have printed Cap. G. by mistake for Cap. E. in line 113 and Cap. E. for Cap. G. in lines 115, 121. 'Lord E.' appears again in IV. i., and 'Cap. G.' and 'Cap. E.' in IV. iii." (Camb. Edd. vol. III. p. 260).

3. if both gain all] the reading of Ff "if both gain, all" is surely wrong. The king tells them to share the advice: but even if both parties take all the advice, it will stretch itself accordingly.

6. well enter'd soldiers] become out and out soldiers. "His pupil age man entered thus" (Coriolanus, II. ii. 103). Eng. Dial. Dict. gives "enter" as a hunting term, meaning to train or break in a hound, etc., to admit him into the regular pack.

Will not confess he owes the malady
 That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords; 10
 Whether I live or die, be you the sons
 Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher Italy,
 Those bated that inherit but the fall
 Of the last monarchy, see that you come
 Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when 15
 The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek,
 That fame may cry you loud: I say, farewell.

Second Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty!

King. Those girls of Italy, take heed of them:

They say our French lack language to deny! 20
 If they demand: beware of being captives,
 Before you serve.

Both. Our hearts receive your warnings.

King. Farewell. [To Bert.] Come hither to me.

[Exit, in his chair.]

12. higher] hired Coleridge conj., hirer Bulloch conj. 13. Those bated] Those bastards Hanmer. 16. questant] F 1; question F 2, 3, 4; quester Collier MS. 23.] [to B.] Pope, [to attendants] Theobald, omitted Ff; [retires to a Couch; Attendants leading him] Capell, [Go backe] Collier MS.

9. he] stands for "it," referring to the heart.

9. owes] owns, as below, II. v. 81.

12, 13. higher . . . inherit] With regard to Hanmer's reading, it seems difficult to meet the objection that the king would hardly speak of these particular Italians as bastards, seeing that his knights were about to enlist in their ranks. Delius thinks he means the nobility of Italy (not including those who but rose on the fall of the Roman Empire). Cf. Julius Cæsar, II. i. 110, "the high (= perfect) east." Other editors have understood it to mean the further part of Italy where the Senoys and Florentines lived. See below, IV. iii. 43.

15, 16.] The reading given is Pope's.

The Ff have "to wed it, when the bravest questant shrinks": "questant" is a word not used again by Shakespeare: I know of no other instance of it. The later Ff give "question"—a possible but very unlikely reading, as the verb "to shrink" is not used by Shakespeare transitively with the meaning "to shirk." If "question" is right, it means "duel," as in Othello, I. iii. 23. In King Lear, III. vii. 17, we find "knights . . . Hot questrists after him."

17. cry you loud] Cf. Beaumont and Fletcher, The Hum. Lieut., II. i. 1, "when all men cry him" (New Eng. Dict.).

23. Come hither to me] There are no stage instructions in the Ff: to supply

First Lord. O my sweet lord, that you will stay behind us!

Par. 'Tis not his fault, the spark.

Second Lord. O! 'tis brave wars. 25

Par. Most admirable: I have seen those wars.

Ber. I am commanded here, and kept a coil with "Too young," and "the next year," and "'tis too early."

Par. An thy mind stand to't, boy, steal away bravely.

Ber. I shall stay here the forehorse to a smock, 30

Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry,

Till honour be bought up, and no sword worn

But one to dance with. By heaven! I'll steal away.

29. An . . . bravely] Theobald; And . . . too't boy, steal away bravely F 1, 2, 3; And thy mind—Stand to it, boy; steal away bravely. Pope.

them is by no means easy. Pope makes the king leave the stage; Capell supposes that he retires to a couch. Mr. P. A. Daniel supposes that the king is conveyed to a couch at the back of the stage and that a traverse is drawn before him; this is perhaps the only satisfactory view. Theobald would make the king tell the attendants to come to him: surely it is Bertram whom he summons; B. moves to obey when the First Lord exclaims "That you will stay behind!" The crux is Bertram's "Stay the king" (line 49). These words probably mean that he is going to stay with or support the king. I cannot think that they can have any reference to the reappearance of the King. Mr. P. A. Daniel would adopt Pope's emendation "Stay; the king—" meaning "I am going to stay. The king—(with a shrug) will have it so." The Cambridge Editors give the reading of the later Ff, "Stay; the king." Explaining: "The king we may suppose is carried out on a couch. When Bertram says 'Stay; the king,' the ushers in attendance throw open the folding doors at the back of the stage, Bertram and Parolles retire close to one of the side doors, and while they are speaking together the king is borne in upon his couch to the front of the stage. . . . We must . . . suppose that he is reclining on a couch throughout the whole scene. Thus at his first appearance, his illness would be made evident to the spectators. After they have set the couch down, the attendants retire to the back of the stage so as to be out of earshot."

30. forehorse . . .] the horse in a team which goes foremost. "I'll learn you the names of all our team and acquaint you with Jock the forehorse and Fibb the fill-horse" (T. Heywood's Fortune by Land and Sea). Bertram refers to ushering in, squiring ladies (Schmidt). Delius takes it to mean a linen-horse.

32. Till . . . bought up] till there is no honour left to be gained (Schmidt).

32, 33. sword . . . to dance with] Men used to wear short swords for dancing, a custom frequently referred to in literature. It is called a "dancing-rapier" in Titus Andronicus, II. i. 39. Cf. also Antony and Cleopatra, III. xi. 36.

First Lord. There's honour in the theft.

Par.

Commit it, count.

Second Lord. I am your accessory; and so farewell. 35

Ber. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured body.

First Lord. Farewell, captain.

Second Lord. Sweet Monsieur Parolles!

Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin.

Good sparks and lustrous, a word, good metals: 40 you shall find in the regiment of the Spinii one Captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister check: it was this very sword entrenched it: say to him, I live, and observe his reports for me. 45

Second Lord. We shall, noble captain. [Exeunt Lords.]

Par. Mars dote on you for his novices! [To Bert.]

What will you do?

Ber. Stay the king.

Par. Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble 50

42. with . . . emblem] Theobald, his cicatrice (sicatrice F 1), with an emblem Ff. 47. [To Bert.] Capell, omitted Ff. 48. you] Capell, ye Ff. 49. Stay the king] F 1; Stay: the king F 2, 3, 4; Stay; the king—Pope.

36. tortured body] Cf. the use of the word body in "the body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments" (Much Ado, 1. 1. 287). It is here used meaning nothing more than "thing." This strange (and somewhat foolish) manner of farewell has been thought corrupt: but I think the reading of the Ff may stand.

48. What will you do?] Capell's reading. Ff have "ye." To whom is this addressed? Capell thinks to Bertram. If so, does Bertram answer, "I will stay the king," or does he interrupt (as most editors take it) by calling attention to the entrance of the king? I think the former. Mr. Daniel writes: "The scene ends line 61 with the departure of Bertram and Parolles. Perhaps we ought now to mark a new scene; but it would necessitate renumbering the lines and cause confusion. The traverse is now withdrawn, discovering Lafeu kneeling before him. On the old stage the king would probably be brought forward in his chair, just as he was conveyed out at line 23." The Cambridge Editors, on the other hand, say: "as printed in the Ff the words 'what will ye do?' seem to be a taunt addressed, after the speaker's manner, to the young lords when their backs were turned."

49. Stay the king] be in attendance on him. See Cotgrave, "Supporter = to support, sustain, stay or beare up."

lords; you have restrained yourself within the list of too cold an adieu: be more expressive to them; for they wear themselves in the cap of the time, there do muster true gait, eat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received 55 star; and though the devil lead the measure, such are to be followed. After them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Ber. And I will do so.

Par. Worthy fellows; and like to prove most sinewy 60 sword-men. [Exeunt Bertram and Parolles.]

Re-enter KING in his chair and LAFEU.

Laf. Pardon, my lord, for me and for my tidings.

King. I'll fee thee to stand up.

Laf. Then 'here's a man stands that has brought his pardon.

I would you had kneel'd, my lord, to ask me mercy, 65
And that at my bidding you could so stand up.

King. I would I had; so I had broke thy pate,

54. gait] Johnson, gate Ff. 55. move] F 1; more F 2, 3, 4. 63. fee] Theobald, see Ff. 64. brought] bought Theobald. 67. and fol. arranged as in Capell.

54. there . . . gait] there (in the cap of time) true gait (those who are fashionable) do muster or come together.

56. measure] dance.

61.] Pope makes this the beginning of Scene ii. And he is probably right. But it is difficult to change what has practically become an accepted division of this Act (into five Scenes).

63. fee thee to stand up] This seems to be an unusual way of saying, "I'll fee thee if thou can'st make me stand up." I know of no instance of the verb "fee" used with "to," but in Fielding's The Mock Doctor, II. iii., there occurs, "I'll fee you, you villain—cure me!" where it evidently means "I'll give you your fee—but cure me." In the present instance the king must have meant, "I'll fee thee if I stand up," to which Lafeu immediately replies, "Then here's a man has brought his pardon." Some editors give "bought." But the pardon is clearly defined by what follows—"tis thus."

And ask'd thee mercy for 't.

Laf. Good faith, across.

But, my good lord, 'tis thus; will you be cur'd
Of your infirmity?

King. No.

Laf. O! will you eat 70

No grapes, my royal fox? Yes, but you will
My noble grapes an if my royal fox
Could reach them. I have seen a medicine
That's able to breathe life into a stone,
Quicken a rock, and make you dance canary 75
With spritely fire and motion; whose simple touch
Is powerful to araise King Pepin, nay,
To give great Charlemain a pen in 's hand
And write to her a love-line.

King. What "her" is this?

Laf. Why, Doctor She. My lord, there's one arriv'd, 80
If you will see her: now, by my faith and honour,
If seriously I may convey my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke

68. Good faith, across] not a brilliant retort. The metaphor is taken from the tournaments; it was considered shameful to break a lance "across" your opponent "like a noble goose" (As You Like It, III. iv. 47).

72. My noble grapes] Rolfe points out that the "my" is emphatic. There is perhaps a reference to Æsop's Fable.

73. medicine] physician. Cotgrave uses the word in the same way. See also Winter's Tale, IV. iv. 597; Macbeth, v. ii. 27.

75. dance canary] to dance a lively jig. The origin of the word "canary" seems obscure, but it may have something to do with the wine.

77. araise] an old form which occurs in Morte d'Arthur, and frequently elsewhere (see New Eng. Dict.).

77. King Pepin] a name chosen because he had been dead some time: in Love's Labour's Lost, IV. i., we hear of "one that was a man when King Pepin was a little boy."

79.] It has been pointed out that this sentence is not grammatically correct; but it is, logically, and I cannot think that a whole line can have been lost. Shakespeare was fond of these elliptical constructions. Capell would read "and give . . . hand To write." It will be remembered that Charlemagne could not write.

83. light deliverance] jesting manner of speaking (W. J. C.).

With one, that in her sex, her years, profession,
 Wisdom and constancy, hath amaz'd me more 85
 Than I dare blame my weakness. Will you see her,
 For that is her demand, and know her business?
 That done, laugh well at me.

King. Now, good Lafeu,
 Bring in the admiration, that we with thee
 May spend our wonder too, or take off thine 90
 By wond'ring how thou took'st it.

Laf. Nay, I'll fit you,
 And not be all day neither. [Exit.]

King. Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Re-enter LAFEU, with HELENA.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

King. This haste hath wings indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your ways. 95
 This is his majesty, say your mind to him:
 A traitor you do look like; but such traitors
 His majesty seldom fears: I am Cressid's uncle,
 That dare leave two together. Fare you well.

[Exit.]

King. Now, fair one, does your business follow us? 100

Hel. Ay, my good lord. Gerard de Narbon was

86. blame] blaze Theobald conj., task Keightley conj. 100. follow] fellow
 Anon. conj. 101. and fol. arranged as in Hanmer.

84. profession] what she professed to be or to be able to do; "her demand and her business" (line 87). Cf. "It is the privilege of mine honours, my oath and my profession" (King Lear, v. iii. 130).

86. blame my weakness] more than I dare confess.

89. admiration] a wonder.

91. I'll fit you] satisfy you.

100. follow us?] Cf. "the liberty that follows our places" (Henry V. v. ii. 297).

My father ; in what he did profess, well found.

King. I knew him.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards him ;

Knowing him is enough. On's bed of death 105

Many receipts he gave me ; chiefly one,

Which, as the dearest issue of his practice,

And of his old experience the only darling,

He bade me store up as a triple eye,

Safer than mine own two, more dear. I have 110
so ;

And, hearing your high majesty is touch'd

With that malignant cause wherein the honour

Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power,

I come to tender it and my appliance,

With all bound humbleness.

King. We thank you, maiden ; 115

But may not be so credulous of cure,

When our most learned doctors leave us, and

The congregated college have concluded

That labouring art can never ransom nature

From her inaidable state ; I say we must not 120

So stain our judgment, or corrupt our hope,

To prostitute our past-cure malady

To empirics, or to dissever so

106. chiefly] namely F 3, 4. 110. two, more dear.] stops substantially as in Steevens ; two : more deare Ff. 120. inaidable] Capell ; inaydible F 1, 2 ; unaydible F 3, 4 ; state] Dyce (ed. 2) (S. Walker conj.), estate Ff.

102. well found] Steevens explains "of known, acknowledged excellence." Delius understands it to mean "learned."

109. triple] used more than once by Shakespeare to mean "third." Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, 1. i. 12.

112. cause] "disease, sickness. 1509, Hawes, Past. Pleas. xviii., xvii., 'I your cause can nothing remedy.' 1578, Lyte, Dodoens, III. xxvi. 353, 'Hellebor may not be ministred except in desperate causes.' Cf. Coriolanus, III. i. 235" (New Eng. Dict.).

Our great self and our credit, to esteem

A senseless help, when help past sense we deem. 125

Hel. My duty then shall pay me for my pains :

I will no^t more enforce mine office on you ;

Humbly entreating from your royal thoughts

A modest one, to bear me back again.

King. I cannot give thee less, to be call'd grateful. 130

Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give

As one near death to those that wish him live ;

But what at full I know, thou know'st no part,

I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Hel. What I can do can do no hurt to try, 135

Since you set up your rest 'gainst remedy.

He that of greatest works is finisher,

Oft does them by the weakest minister :

So holy writ in babes hath judgment shown,

When judges have been babes ; great floods have flown 140

From simple sources ; and great seas have dried

When miracles have by the great'st been denied.

125. help] cure, as often in Shakespeare. See below, II. iii. 16. Also Two Gentlemen, "help him of his blindness" (in Who is Sylvia?).

136. set up your rest] Professor Dowden says it is "a metaphor from primero (a game at cards) ; the stake was a smaller sum, the rest a larger sum, which, if a player were confident (or desperate) might all be set or set up, that is, wagered." In the game of primero played in dialogue (in the Dialogues (p. 26) appended to Minshew's Spanish Dict.) "two shillings form the stake, eight shillings the rest. . . ." Cotgrave has under Ren- vier : " Il y renvoyoit de sa reste, He set his whole rest, he adventured all his estate upon it." Hence to set up one's rest came to mean to be determined, resolved. For many examples, see Nares' Glossary. See also Romeo and Juliet, IV. v. 6 (and others).

140. judges have been babes] Holt White supposes that Shakespeare referred to the story of Susanna and Daniel. On the other hand, Malone thinks the passage refers to Christ's well-known words.

142. by the great'st] "by" is here used as in the phrase "he did his duty by his children."

Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
 Where most it promises; and oft it hits ✓
 Where hope is coldest and despair most fits. 145

King. I must not hear thee: fare thee well, kind maid.

Thy pains, not us'd, must by thyself be paid:
 Proffers not took reap thanks for their reward.

Hel. Inspired merit so by breath is barr'd.

It is not so with him that all things knows, 150

As 'tis with us that square our guess by shows;

But most it is presumption in us when

The help of heaven we count the act of men,

Dear sir, to my endeavours give consent;

Of heaven, not me, make an experiment. 155

I am not an impostor that proclaim

Myself against the level of mine aim;

But know I think, and think I know most sure,

My art is not past power nor you past cure. •

King. Art thou so confident? Within what space 160

Hop'st thou my cure?

Hel. The great'st grace lending grace,

143.] Johnson believes that a line has dropt out here, because there is nothing to rhyme with "there." 145. fits] Collier (Theobald conj.), shifts Ff. 156. impostor] F 3, 4; imposture F 1, 2; imposture Capell. 161. The great'st . . . grace] Capell, The greatest grace lending grace Ff, The greatest lending grace Rowe.

145. fits] The Ff read "shifts." On the margin of the copy in Lord Ellesmere's possession, the correction "ffits" has been made. Theobald suggested the same emendation.

149. by breath is barr'd] bar=to prevent or keep out. "Merriment which bars a thousand harms" (Taming of the Shrew, Induction, ii. 138). "Breath"=(probably) language, word,—as in Measure for Measure, v. 122, "permit A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall on him."

151. square our guess by shows] Cf. "thou art said to have a stubborn soul, that apprehends no further than this world, and squarest thy life according" (Measure for Measure, v. 487).

156, 157. proclaim . . . mine aim] To proclaim one thing against another is to say that it is better or superior to it. Helen says, "Myself (my power) which I proclaim is not inferior to (or unable to attain) the high level of my aim."

161. The . . . grace] The Ff read "the greatest grace lending grace."

Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring,
 Ere twice in mufk and occidental damp
 Moist Hesperus hath quench'd her sleepy lamp 165
 Or four-and-twenty times the pilot's glass
 Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass,
 What is infirm from your sound parts shall fly,
 Health shall live free, and sickness freely die.

King. Upon thy certainty and confidence 170
 What dar'st thou venture?

Hel. Tax of impudence,
 A strumpet's boldness, a divulged shame,
 Traduc'd by odious ballads: my maid's name
 Sear'd otherwise; ne worse of worst, extended

173. maid's name] S. Walker conj., maiden's name Ff. 174. ne worse of worst] Ff, nay, worse, if worse, extended Anon. conj., on worst of racks extended Anon. conj. The later Ff have "no" instead of "ne."

Most editors give "great'st." But the line "Hapest thou my cure? The great'st grace lending grace" is impossible: it is difficult to believe Shakespeare wrote it. Mr. Craig writes and says, "Suppose that Shakespeare wrote first, 'The great God lending grace,' and that, on account of the Act against profanity on the stage, the players were induced to alter this and instead of 'God' put 'grace.' Then finding that 'the great Grace' did not sound well they may have decided to read 'the great'st grace lending grace.'" Delius quotes Macbeth, v. vii., "by the grace of Grace."

164. in mufk] this word may here be either a noun or an adjective: it matters little which of the two.

165. her] most editors correct this to "his." But the "mistake" was possibly in the original MS., and it is as well to leave it.

166. pilot's glass] technically half an hour. Not so used by Shakespeare. (See Shakespeare and Sea-Glasses, by Dr. Brinsley Nicholson, New Sh. Soc. Tr., March 12, 1880.)

171. Tat] accusation.

174. ne] and not. By "ne worse of worst" Helena probably means that nothing could be worse than "my name sear'd otherwise." extended = seized by a course of law. Johnson (Dict.) quotes Hudibras: "The law that settles all you do, And marries where you did but woo; An(d) if it judge upon your side, Will soon extend her for your bride; And put her person, goods or lands, Or which you like best, int' your hands." Cf. also As You Like It, III. i. 17, "Let my officers make an extent upon his house and land, And turn him going." Also Antony and Cleopatra, I. ii. 105, "Labienus hath extended Asia."—The Cambridge Editors cite more than twenty various readings of this phrase.

With vilest torture let my life be ended. 175
King. Methinks in thee some blessed spirit doth speak
 His powerful sound within an organ weak ;
 And what impossibility would slay
 In common sense, sense saves another way.
 Thy life is dear ; for all that life can rate 180
 Worth name of life in thee hath estimate ;
 Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, . . . all
 That happiness and prime can happy call :
 Thou this to hazard needs must intimate
 Skill infinite or monstrous desperate. 185
 Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try,
 That ministers thine own death if I die.
Hel. If I break time, or flinch in property
 Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die,
 And well deserv'd. Not helping, death's my fee ; 190
 But, if I help, what do you promise me ?
King. Make thy demand.

175. vilest] vildest F 1, 2. 182. courage . . . all] courage, all Ff. Two syllables seem to have been left out here, perhaps "health and." Theobald supplies "virtue," Collier "honour." 183. happiness and] happiness in Rann (Mason conj.).

177. powerful sound] direct object of "speak."

178, 179. what . . . another way] There's sense in what you say, but it is not common sense.

181. in thee hath estimate] Hath great value in a young life like yours.

183. happiness and prime] Why change to "happiness in prime" as Rann and Mason conjecture? Because "in the prime" is the trite phrase? This use of the word "prime" is as beautiful as the one in which Shakespeare says, "love is crowned with the prime in-spring time."

185. monstrous desperate] a strange construction. Desperate seems to agree with "a disposition" understood. The meaning is quite clear.

188, 189. property Of what] "in property of" does not seem to have been a usual construction at any time. Shakespeare speaks of "property of blood," meaning probably "right." Milton uses the word "proper" meaning "original" in the phrase "our proper motion." Perhaps the sentence here means, "If I flinch in the exact fulfilment of the conditions I have accepted. . . ."

Hel. But will you make it even?

King. Ay, by my sceptre, and my hopes of heaven.

Hel. Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand
 What husband in thy power I will command: 195
 Exempted be from me the arrogance
 To choose from forth the royal blood of France,
 My low and humble name to propagate
 With any branch or image of thy state;
 But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know 200
 Is free for me to ask, thee to bestow.

King. Here is my hand; the premises observ'd,
 Thy will by my performance shall be serv'd:
 So make the choice of thy own time, for I,
 Thy resolv'd patient, on thee still rely. 205
 More should I question thee, and more I must, Though more to know could not be more to trust,
 From whence thou cam'st, how' tended on; but rest
 Unquestion'd welcome and undoubted blest.
 Give me some help here, ho! If thou proceed 210
 As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

193. heaven] Theobald (Thirlby conj.), help(e) Ff. 199. image] impage (Warburton).

193. hopes of heaven] Ff have "helpe" instead of "heaven." As Boswell points out, the only reason for changing what is perfect sense is the break in the rhyme; the reason is sufficiently conclusive here.

199. image of thy state] Warburton's emendation "impage" is beautiful:

but he gives no instance of the use of this word: it seems rare. Henley says that "branch refers to the collateral descendants of the royal blood, and image to the direct and immediate line."

201. bestow] See note on II. iii. 55, below.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter COUNTESS and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clo. I will show myself highly fed and lowly taught.
I know my business is but to the court.

Count. To the court! why, what place make you special, when you put off that with such contempt?
"But to the court!" 5

Clo. Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court: he that cannot make a leg, put off's cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and indeed such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court. But for me, I have an answer will serve all men. 10

Count. Marry, that's a bountiful answer that fits all questions. 15

Clo. It is like a barber's chair that fits all buttocks; the pin-buttock, the quatch-buttock, the brawn buttock, or any buttock. /

6, 7. contempt? . . . court!] Pope, contempt, . . . court? Ff. 13. court.
But] Rowe, court, but Ff.

10, 11. cannot . . . say nothing] cannot say anything.

10. make a leg] a common phrase; cf. Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, "Hath travelled to make legs and seen the cringe Of several courts" (W. J. C.).

17. like a barber's chair] proverbial (see Ray's Proverbs. Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, ed. 1632, p. 666).

Steevens quotes from More Fooles Yet by R. S. — 1610, 4to: "Moreover sattin sutes he doth compare Unto the service of a barber's chayre; As fit for every Jacke and journeyman As for a knight or worthy gentleman."

18. quatch] fat and squat (probably). I know of no other instance of this word.

Count. Will your answer serve fit to all questions? 20

Clo. As fit as ten groats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your taffeta punk, as Tib's rush for Tom's forefinger, as a pancake for Shrove-Tuesday, a morris for May-day, as the nail to his hole, the cuckold to his 25 horn, as a scolding quean to a wrangling knave, ✓ as the nun's lip to the friar's mouth; nay, as the pudding to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions? 30

Clo. From below your duke to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size that must fit all demands.

Clo. But a trifle neither, in good faith, if the learned 35 should speak truth of it. Here it is, and all that belongs to't: ask me if I am a courtier; it shall do you no harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could. I will be

20. serve fit to] suit, fit. Cf. "How fit his garments serve me!" (Cymbeline, iv. i. 2).

21. ten groats] a piece of money worth 3s. 4d.—the attorney's fee.

22. French crown] there is probably a reference to "Morbus Gallicus"—the joke was a favourite one (see Midsummer Night's Dream, i. ii. 99).

22, 23. taffeta punk] strumpet dressed in taffeta. French crown=her price. There is an old proverb, "All that the Clarke toyles for his Punke devours."

23. Tib's . . . forefinger] Sir J. Hawkins says that "Tom is the man and Tib the woman; therefore, more properly, we might read—Tom's rush for Tib's finger." But it is of small importance. "Rush" is probably a reference to the old custom (or abuse) of putting a rush ring on the finger of a woman about to marry de facto but not de jure. (See Brand's Popular Antiquities, Bohn's ed. 2, 107.)

24. morris] "a mayday frolic, with dancing and a hobby-horse performance: originally called morisco, and said to be derived from the Moors through Spain, where it is still popular under the name of fandango" (Dr. Herford). Cf. the game of Nine men's morris (Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. i. 98).

39. young again, if we could] "The a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courtier? 40

Clo. O Lord, sir! there's a simple putting off.
More, more, a hundred of them.

Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves you.

Clo. O Lord, sir! Thick, thick, spare not me. 45

Count. I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.

Clo. O Lord, sir! Nay, put me to't, I warrant you.

Count. You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.

Clo. O Lord, sir! Spare not me. 50

Count. Do you cry, "O Lord, sir!" at your whipping, and "spare not me"? Indeed your "O Lord, sir!" is very sequent to your whipping: you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to't. 55

Clo. I ne'er had worse luck in my life in my "O Lord, sir!" • I see things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Count. I play the noble housewife with the time,
To entertain't so merrily with a fool. 60

Clo. O Lord, sir! why, there't serves well again.

Count. An end, sir: to your business. Give Helen this, 41. I pray] F 3; I.a. I pray . . . F 1, 2; Lady. I pray . . . F 4. 59, 60.] Prose in Ff; verse by Knight. 60. entertain't] Cambridge Edd. (S.

Walker conj.), entertain it Ff. 62. An end, sir: to] Rowe (ed. 2); And end sir to F 1, 2; And end; sir to F 3, 4.

lady censures her own levity in trifling with her jester, as a ridiculous attempt to return back to youth" (Johnson).
"To be" is dependent on the clown's
"to learn" (Cowden Clarke).

42. O Lord, sir] Warburton calls this "that foolish expletive of speech then in vogue at court." It was ridiculed by other writers.

45. thick] quick. Cf. Cymbeline,
III. ii. 58, "Say and speak thick," Troilus and Cressida, III. ii. 38, "my heart beats thicker than a feverish pulse."

And urge her to a present answer back :

Commend me to my kinsmen and my son.

This is not much.

65

Clo. Not much commendation to them.

Count. Not much employment for you: you understand me?

Clo. Most fruitfully: I am there before my legs.

Count. Haste you again.

[Exeunt severally. 70

SCENE III.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Enter BERTRAM, LAFEU, and PAROLLES.

Laf. They say miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons, to make modern and familiar, things supernatural and causeless.

Hence is it that we make trifles of terrors, ensconcing ourselves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknown fear. 5

Par. Why, 'tis the rarest argument of wonder that hath shot out in our latter times.

66. them] them? Theobald conj.

68. me?] Capell, me. Ff.

66. Not . . . them] may be a question as Theobald conjectured. But it is just as well as it is.

Scene III.

2, 3. modern and familiar] See Act v. iii. 216, below, "with her modern grace." Also As You Like It, II. vii. 156, "Full of wise saws and modern instances." "Modern" occurs frequently (ten times) in Shakespeare, and in this case means "common, everyday."

3. causeless] "having no antecedent cause, fortuitous (New Eng. Dict.).

4, 5. ensconcing ourselves into] an instance of the use of a verb of rest with into. Literally "retire into a scone or fortification." It is thus used by Rowley in A Match at Midnight, "Look an he hath not esconced himself" (Dods. Old Plays, Hazl. vol. xiii. p. 47). W. J. C. Cf. Sonnets, xlix., "Against that time do I insconce me here Within the knowledge of mine own desert."

6. an unknown fear] one of Shakespeare's beautiful metonymies.

7. argument] subject. Cf. "The argument of your praise" (King Lear, I. i. 218); see also Much Ado, II. iii. 11, and below, III. v. 60.

Ber. And so 'tis.

Laf. To be relinquished of the artists,— 10

Par. So I say, both of Galen and Paracelsus.

Laf. Of all the learned and authentic fellows,—

Par. Right; so I say.

Laf. That gave him out incurable,—

Par. Why, there 'tis; so say I too. 15

Laf. Not to be help'd,—

Par. Right; as 'twere a man assured of a—

Laf. Uncertain life, and sure death.

Par. Just, you say well: so would I have said.

Laf. I may truly say it is a novelty to the world. 20

Par. It is, indeed: if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in — what do you call there?

Laf. A showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor 25

Par. That's it; I would have said the very same.

11.] The Cambridge Editors suggest giving the words "both . . . Paracelsus" to Lafeu and adding another "Par. So I say." This reading has been adopted in the Globe and Oxford editions. 21. It is, indeed: if] it is indeede if Ff. 22. in—what] Capell, in what Ff. 23. there?] Capell, there. Ff. 26. That's it; I . . . said the] That's it, I . . . said, the F 1, 2, 3; That's it, I . . . said; the Capell.

10. artists] used only a few times by Shakespeare and always in the sense of "scholars." The universities still use the word "arts" in the same way.

11. Galen and Paracelsus] Galen, A.D. 130–200 (?) Paracelsus, 1493–1541 —two names usually linked together and familiar to all, as representing medicine generally.

12. authentic] original; perhaps duly qualified, licensed. Cf. 1540, Act 32 Henry VIII., xxv., "With the approbations and testimonies of fowre sundrie notaries authentique thereunto subscribed." 1610, Ben Jonson, Alch. II. iii., "Why, h' is the most authentic dealer in these commodities" (New Eng. Dict.). The author of Was Shakespeare a Lawyer? sees here a reference to the recognised members of the College of Physicians which first received a charter from Edward VI. (?)

16. help'd] cured, as above, II. i. 125.

21. in showing] on paper.

24, 25. A showing . . . actor] Warburton says that this must be the title of some pamphlet here ridiculed.

Laf. Why, your dolphin is not lustier: 'fore me, I speak in respect—

Par. Nay, 'tis strang^d, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he's of a most facin^{er}ious spirit that will not acknowledge it to be the— 30

Laf. Very hand of heaven—

Par. Ay, so I say.

Laf. In a most weak— 35

Par. And debile minister, great power, great transcendence: which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made than alone the recovery of the king, as to be—

Laf. Generally thankful. 40

Par. I would have said it: you say well. Here comes the king.

Enter KING, HELENA, and Attendants.

Laf. Lustig, as the Dutchman says: I'll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head. Why, he's able to lead her a carranto. 45

[35-40.] There are various readings. The passage may be corrupt. 43.
Lustig] Lustique F 1, 2.

27. dolphin] "a plain fish." Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, v. ii. 88, "His delights Were dolphin like." In Holland's Pliny (a book Shakespeare read) the dolphin is described as being "the swiftest of all other living creatures, and not of sea-fish only . . . quicker than the flying fowl . . . disporteth himself and fetcheth a thousand frisks and gambols" (W. J. C.).

31. facinerosus] Parolles' mistake for "facinorous," a word meaning wicked.

43. Lustig] A Dutch word used by English writers of that time. Steevens gives two instances from works dated 1618 and 1634 (respectively), namely, "can walk a mile or two as lustique as a boor"—"what! all lustick, all frolicksome!"

45. carranto] a coranto = lively dance. See Twelfth Night, I. iii. 137, and Henry V. III. v. 33. Johnson calls it "cor'ant, a lofty sprightly dance, from French courant" (it used to be spelled "couranto").

Par. Mor du vinager! Is not this Helen?

Laf. 'Fore God, I think so.

King. Go, call before me all the lord~~s~~ in court.

Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side:

And with this healthful hand, whose banish'd sense 50

Thou hast repeal'd, a second time receive

The confirmation of my promis'd gift,

Which but attends thy naming.

Enter several Lords.

Fair maid, send forth thine eye: this youthful parcel

Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing, 55

O'er whom both sovereign power and father's voice

I have to use: thy frank election make;

Thou hast power to choose, and they none to forsake.

Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress

Fall, when Love please! marry, to each, but one. —50

46. Mort du vinager] Ff, Mort du vinaigre Usu. Rdg., Mort du vainqueur Collier. 59, 60. mistress Fall,] Rowe, Mistris; Fall Ff.

46. Mor du vinager] a meaningless oath. Probably Parolles intended to swear in French. The result is unsatisfactory in every way.

47. 'Fore God] Cf. 1435, Torr. Portugal, 745. "Fore Sen Jame! What ys the gyantes name." The expression "foregad" is a common one (New Eng. Dict.).

50. healthful] healthy.

51. repeal'd] called back, restored from banishment. Cf. "the banished Bolingbroke repeals himself" (Richard II. II. ii. 49).

54. parcel] party. Cf. "This parcel of woovers" (Merchant of Venice, I. ii. 119).

55. at my bestowing] The feudal lord might tender a husband to his female ward in her minority, and if she rejected the proposal she forfeited the sum which the guardian could have obtained from such an alliance. This was afterwards extended to male wards (Student's Hume, 1870, p. 132).

57. frank election] a legal phrase, which, according to Rushton, occurs in 3 Edward I. (Westminster the First), cap. v.

58. forsake] refuse, deny (German, versagen). An anonymous writer in Notes and Queries (5th S. viii. 182, x. 145) quotes B. R[ich], in Greene's News both from Heaven and Hell (1593), who introduces a bricklayer "who forsooke to goe into heauen because his wife was there."

60. marry . . . one] One of the many delightful touches which make Helena so charming a character. She means that there is only one Lord to whom she cannot wish a fair and

Laf. I'd give bay Curtal and his furniture,
My mouth no more were broken than these boys',
And writ as little beard.

King. Peruse them well:
Not one of those but had a noble father.

Hel. Gentlemen, 65
Heaven hath through me restor'd the king to health.

All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.

Hel. I am a simple maid; and therein wealthiest
That I protest I simply am a maid.
Please it your majesty, I have done already: 70
The blushes in my cheeks thus whisper me,
"We blush that thou should'st choose; but, be refus'd,
Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever;
We'll ne'er come there again."

King. Make choice; and, see,
Who shuns thy love, shuns all his love in me. 75

Hel. Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly,
And to imperial Love, that god most high,
Do my sighs stream. Sirs, will you hear my suit?

65, 66.] Capell's arrangement; prose in Ff. 65.] [She addresses her to a Lord.] Ff. 72. choose; but, be refused] Rann; chooseth, but be refused F 1, 2, 3. 77. imperial Love] imperiall loue F 1; imperial Jove F 2; impartial Jove F 3, 4. 78. Sirs] Thiselton conj., Sir Ff.

virtuous mistress, because that one is to have her to wife.

61. Curtal] 1530, Palsgr. 68, Courtault, a courtall, a horse. Ibid. 506-1. "I wyll cutte of my horse tayle and make hym a courtault" (New Eng. Dict.).

61. furniture] trappings. Cf. "The horse's furniture must be of very sensible colours" (Dryden).

62. broken] a broken mouth is one which has lost part of its teeth (Johnson).

63. writ as little beard] Cf. "as if he had writ man since his father was a bachelor" (2 Henry IV. 1. ii. 30).

72. be refus'd] In the Ff the semicolon is put after "refused": the punctuation here given has been adopted by most editors, as it makes more sense. "But if you are refused, let your cheeks be for ever pale, for we will never come again." The personification of blushes is as beautiful as it is scarce.

78. Sirs] The Ff read "Sir," as if Helena addressed herself only to one Lord. The context supports Thisel-

First Lord. And grant it.

Hel. Thanks, sir; all the rest is mute.

Laf. I had rather be in this choice than throw ames-ace for my life.

Hel. The honour, sir, that flames in your fair eyes,
Before I speak, too threateningly replies:
Love make your fortunes twenty times above
Her that so wishes, and her humble love! 85

Second Lord. No better, if you please.

Hel. My wish receive,
Which great Jove grant! and so I take my leave.

Laf. Do all they deny her? An they were sons of mine I'd have them whipped, or I would send them to the Turk to make eunuchs of. 90

Hel. Be not afraid that I your hand should take;
I'll never do you wrong for your own sake:
Blessing upon your vows! and in your bed
Find fairer fortune, if you ever wed!

Laf. These boys are boys of ice, they'll none have 95 her: sure, they are bastards to the English; the French ne'er got 'em.

80, 81.] Prose in Pope. In the Ff, two verses ending throw . . . life.
81. ames-ace] F 1; A deaus-ace F 2, 3, 4. 87. Jove] F 3, 4; love F 1, 2.
88. An] Capell, And Ff.

ton's conjecture, that "the comma after 'Sir' may have been 's' in the MS."

79. the rest is mute] the others are all silent.

80. I had rather . . .] This passage as usually interpreted seems rather foolish. I suspect that Lafeu means he would very much like to be in this choice—"for my life!" may be an exclamation. "Ames-ace" (two sixes of dice) is used in modern English. Lowell (Shakespeare Once More, Essays on the English Poets, Walter Scott ed.) writes: ". . . risk the prosperity of a verse upon a lucky throw of words, which may come up the sixes of hardy metaphor or the ambace of conceit."

83. Before I speak] Helen, passing the second lord, pays him this compliment to excuse her refusal.

Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good,
To make yourself a son out of my blood.

Fourth Lord. Fair one, I think not so. 100

Laf. There's one grape yet; I am sure thy father drank wine. But if thou be'st not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen: I have known thee already.

Hel. [To Bertram.] I dare not say I take you; but I give Me and my service, ever whilst I live, 105
Into your guiding power. This is the man.

King. Why, then, young Bertram, take her; she's thy wife.

Ber. My wife, my liege! I shall beseech your highness,
In such a business give me leave to use
The help of mine own eyes.

King. Know'st thou not, Bertram, 110
What she has done for me?

Ber. Yes, my good lord;
• But never hope to know why I should marry her.

King. Thou know'st she has rais'd me from my sickly bed.

Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down Must answer for your raising? I know her well: 115
She had her breeding at my father's charge.
A poor physician's daughter my wife! Disdain
Rather corrupt me ever!

King. 'Tis only title thou disdain'st in her, the which 101, 102]. Theobald (Warburton) arrange as follows: "Laf. There's one grape yet,— Par. I am sure thy father drank wine. Laf. But if . . ." 104.] [To Bertram.] Rowe. 107. Why . . . wife] verse Rowe; prose Ff. 110-113. Know'st thou . . . bed] verse Pope; prose Ff.

98. You are too young . . .] This speech is, in Ff, attributed to Lafeu.

101, 102. thy father drank wine] therefore thou shouldst have fire within thy skin (Delius).

103. known thee already] Am sure of it, from what I have seen of you.

117, 118. Disdain Rather corrupt me ever] disgrace make me ever despicable in future.

119. only title] only lack of title. Cf. "I almost die for food" (As You Like It, II. vii. 104).

I can build up. Strange is it that our bloods, 120
 Of colour, weight, and heat, pour'd all together,
 Would quite confound distinction, yet stands off
 In differences so mighty. If sh^d be
 All that is virtuous, save what thou dislik'st,
 A poor physician's daughter, thou dislik'st 125
 Of virtue for the name; but do not so:
 ✓ From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,
 The place is dignified by the doer's deed:
 Where great additions swell's, and virtue none,
 It is a dropsied honour. Good alone 130
 Is good without a name? Vileness is so:
 The property by what it is should go,
 Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair;
 In these to nature she's immediate heir,
 And these breed honour: that is honour's scorn 135
 Which challenges itself as honour's born,
 And is not like the sire: honours thrive

127. place when] Theobald (Thirlby conj.), place, whence Ff. 129. additions swell's] F 1; addition swell's F 2; addition swells F 3 4; additions swells Malone. 130, 131. Good alone Is good without a name? Vileness is so] F 1, 2, 3. Most editors follow F 4, which drops the note of interrogation after name. 137. honours thrive] F 1; honours best thrive F 2, 3, 4.

120. bloods] plural form with singular meaning.

121. Of colour . . . heat] Either, as Malone understands, "of one and same colour (etc.)," or else "as regards colour (etc.)." The latter is the meaning given by Abbott.

124. what thou dislik'st] This seems to refer to "a poor physician's daughter."

125, 126. dislik'st Of] Cf. "If you like of me" (Much Ado, v. iv. 59).

129. additions] "In our common law 'addition' signifieth any title given to a man besides his name" (Bullokar, An English Expositor, quoted by W. J. Craig in his "Little Quarto Shakespeare").

129. swell's] probably for "swell us," as Boswell explains.

130, 131. Good alone . . . name?] Is only goodness good when it has no title? No, for vileness is vile when it has no title. "Let's write good angel on the devil's horn, 'Tis not the devil's crest" (Steevens).

136. challenges itself] makes a claim for itself.

137. honours thrive] F 2, 3, 4 read "honours best thrive." But "sire" is a dissyllable (Abbott's Grammar, 480).

When rather from our acts we them derive
 Than our foregoers: the mere words a slave,
 Debosh'd on every tomb, on every grave 140
 A lying trophy, and as oft is dumb
 Where dust and damn'd oblivion is the tomb
 Of honour'd bones indeed. What should be said?
 If thou canst like this creature as a maid,
 I can create the rest: virtue and she 145
 Is her own dower; honour and wealth from me.

Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to do't.

King. Thou wrong'st thyself if thou should'st strive to choose.

Hel. That you are well restor'd, my lord, I'm glad:
 Let the rest go. 150

King. My honour's at the stake, which to defeat
 I must produce my power. Here, take her hand,
 Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift,
 That dost in vile misprision shackle up

139. words] F 1; word's F 2, 3, 4. 140. grave] grave: Ff. 142, 143.
tomb Of . . . indeed] Theobald (Thirlby conj.), Tombe. Of . . . indeed Ff.
 151. defeat] defend Theobald.

138.] "The pith o' sense and pride o' worth Are higher ranks than a'
 that."

139. words] same construction as in Coriolanus, IV. v. 242, "as warres may be said to be a ravisher."

140. Debosh'd] vitiated and worthless; now spelled debauched.

143. honour'd bones] bones worthy of being honoured.

145. virtue and she] Perhaps we should read "virtue—and she is her own dower"; meaning "as far as virtue is concerned she has nothing to receive in addition" (conj. by H. T., author of Was Shakespeare a Lawyer?).

148. strive to choose] Bertram being the king's ward has no right to choose.

151. which to defeat] "which" here refers to the loss of his honour, which the king implies by saying that it is at the stake. Malone quotes the parallel in Othello, " . . . She dying gave it me,
 And bid me, when my fate would have me wive, To give it her," i.e. to my wife, though not before mentioned but by implication. Theobald prefers to change "defeat," writing instead "defend."

152. produce] unsheath as a sword drawn from its scabbard.

154. misprision] "Misprision is included in every treason or felony, and

My love and her desert; that canst not dream, 155
 We, poisoning us in her defective scale,
 Shall weigh thee to the beam; that wilt not know,
 It is in us to plant thine honour where
 We please to have it grow. Check thy contempt:
 Obey our will, which travails in thy good: 160
 Believe not thy disdain, but presently
 Do thine own fortunes that obedient right
 Which both thy duty owes and our power claims;
 Or I will throw thee from my care for ever
 Into the staggers and the careless lapse 165
 Of youth and ignorance; both my revenge and hate
 Loosing upon thee, in the name of justice,
 Without all terms of pity. Speak; thine answer.
Ber. Pardon, my gracious lord; for I submit
 My fancy to your eyes. When I consider 170
 What great creation and what dole of honour

165. careless] cureless Dyce (ed. 2), S. Walker conj.

when any one hath committed treason or felony the king may order that he shall be indicted for misprision only" (Wood's Institutes, 2nd ed., 406). "The king (here) probably uses it in a double sense, signifying wrong or false imprisonment . . . and also signifying contempt, with which word it is connected with the passage below, III. ii. 31" (Rushton). Cf. 1 Henry IV. i. iii. 27, and Twelfth Night, i. v. 61.

165. staggers] Shakespeare uses this word once in its literal sense of a disease in horses, "Spoiled with the staggers" (Taming of the Shrew, III. ii. 55). Here it is used to signify a giddy and useless existence. Beaumont and Fletcher write, "Poor Gentleman, he's troubled with the staggers."

165. careless] Dyce has a strong case for the emendation "cureless," quoting W. W. Williams (The Parthenon, Nov. 1, 1862): "I have always considered 'cureless' to be the author's word. 1. Because 'care' in the one line, and 'careless' in the other, where no verbal resemblance can be intended, presents an anti-Shakespearian cacophony. 2. We have countless misprints of the same kind: as in Troilus and Cressida, where the Q gives us 'destruction' and the F 'distraction.' 3. Lapse = fall; and the king is unmistakably warning Bertram that, if he does not obey him, he will let him go his own headstrong way to irreparable ruin. As, 'Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall To cureless ruin,' Merchant of Venice, 1Y. i. 141."

171. dole of honour] share of honour. See Henry V. IV. iii. 22.

Flies where you bid it, I find that she, which late

Was, in my nobler thoughts most base, is now
The praised of the king; who, so ennobled,
Is as 'twere born so.

King. Take her by the hand, 175

And tell her she is thine: to whom I promise
A counterpoise; if not to thy estate,
A balance more replete.

Ber. I take her hand.

King. Good fortune and the favour of the king
Smile upon this contract; whose ceremony 180
Shall seem expedient on the now-born brief,
And be perform'd to-night: the solemn feast
Shall more attend upon the coming space,
Expecting absent friends. As thou lov'st her,

* 172. bid it] bid Rowe. 179. king] S. Walker conj. a corruption. 181.
now-born] now borne F 1, 2; now born F 3, 4; new-born Warburton.

177. if not . . . estate] if she be not thine equal in rank, I will make the balance more replete. Cf. "fortune now to my heart's hope!" (Merchant of Venice, II. ix. 20); "to her own worth she shall be prized" (Troilus and Cressida, IV. iv. 135); "a soldier even to Cato's wish" (Coriolanus, I. iv. 57).

179. king] S. Walker conjectures that this word is a misprint, being a repetition of the same word which occurs a few lines above. It does seem curious that the king should thus speak of himself. Perhaps it should be "the favour of the Lord."

181. seem . . . brief] "seem" here means figure or be notified as expedient . . . be found to be expedient. "Now-born" means either just written or now borne away; it is difficult to say which. Does brief mean a letter? If so, is it the letter despatched by the Countess to Helena (II. ii. 66) of which the king may have heard during his conversation with Bertram? (Schmidt). Is it a summary or temporary contract as in "She told me in a sweet verbal brief" (which occurs below, v. iii. 137)? Or is it something that will be developed afterwards? "The hand of time shall draw this brief into as huge a volume" (King John, II. 103). Or does it mean "a royal command"? There is no deciding, I think.

183. Shall . . . space] another obscure phrase. Probably means "shall not take place in the immediate future, at all events until the expected absent friends arrive." This passage seems obscurely to prophesy that the feast would be postponed, and that it would eventually be a matter of expecting absent friends—only the audience know what friends.

Thy love's to me religious; else, does err. 185

[Exeunt. Parolles and Lafeu stay behind, commenting of this wedding.

Laf. Do you hear, monsieur? a word vith you.

Par. Your pleasure, sir.

Laf. Your lord and master did well to make his recantation.

Par. Recantation! My lord! my master! 190

Laf. Ay; is it not a language I speak?

Par. A most harsh one, and not to be understood without bloody succeeding. My master!

Laf. Are you companion to the Count Rousillon?

Par. To any count; to all counts; to what is man. 195

Laf. To what is count's man: count's master is of another style.

Par. You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you, you are too old.

Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; to which 200 title age cannot bring thee.

Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.

Laf. I did think thee, for two ordinaries, to be a pretty wise fellow: thou didst make tolerable vent of thy travel; it might pass: yet the scarfs and the 205 bannerets about thee did manifoldly dissuade me

203. ordinaries, to] ordinaries: to F 1, 2; ordinaries to F 3, 4.

193. bloody succeeding] subsequent shedding of blood.

195. to what is man] Parolles doubtless means to imply that Lafeu is no man. Lafeu takes the word in another sense.

200. I write man] Cf. "Albeit I did write man, yet I was but a young lad
... and a meere child in the knowledge of these things" (Mabbe's translation of Guzman de Alfarache, 1623,

W. G. Stone, New Sh. Soc. Trans., 1880-85, p. 399).

203. two ordinaries] two meals, two days. Cf. "goes to the feast And for hjs ordinary pays his heart For what his eyes eat only" (Antony and Cleopatra, II. ii. 230).

from believing thee a vessel of too great a burthen.
 I have now found thee; when I lose thee again,
 I care not; yet art thou good for nothing but taking up, and that thou'rt scarce worth. 210

Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee,—

Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou hasten thy trial; which if—Lord have mercy on thee for a hen! So, my good window of lattice, 215 fare thee well: thy casement I need not open, for
 I look through thee. Give me thy hand.

Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indignity.

Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy of it. 220

Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.

Laf. Yes, good faith, every dram of it; and I will not bate thee a scruple.

Par. Well, I shall be wiser—

Laf. E'en as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull 225 at a smack o' the contrary. If ever thou be'st bound in thy scarf and beaten, thou shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or

214. if—] Theobald; if, F 1, 2; is, F 3, 4. 224. wiser—] Theobald, wiser.
 ff. 225, 226. thou hast to pull at a smack o' the contrary] thou hast too full a smack Daniel conj.

210. taking up] Johnson says that
 "to take up" is to contradict, to call to account. Cf. the quibble "take this shadow up, for 'tis thy rival" (Two Gentlemen of Verona, IV. iv. 202); "a whoreson jackanapes must take me up for swearing" (Cymbeline, II. i. 4).

215. a hen] term of contempt, as in "hen-hearted."

215. lattice] ale-house window.

225, 226. pull at . . . contrary] pull or draw at a taste of folly, as at a vessel: taste or considerable amount.
 Schmidt asks "with a pun? meaning also a small vessel, a sloop?" Cf.
 "some smack of age" (2 Henry IV.
 I. ii. 111).

rather my knowledge, that I may say in the 230 default, he is a man I know.

Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.

Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal: for doing I am past; as I will 235 by thee, in what motion age will give me leave.

[Exit.

Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me; scurvy, old, filthy, scurvy lord! Well, I must be patient; there is no fettering of authority.
I'll beat him, by my life, if I can meet him with 240 any convenience, an he were double and double a lord. I'll have no more pity of his age than I would have of—I'll beat him, an if I could but meet him again!

Re-enter LAFEU.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married; there's 245 news for you: you have a new mistress.

Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs: he is my good lord: whom I serve above is my master.

Laf. Who? God? 250

235, 236.] Probably corrupt. Hanmer considers "for doing . . . leave" spurious. Warburton supposes a line to be lost after "past." 250. God?
F 4; God. F 1, 2, 3.

230, 231. in the default] when necessary, needful.

236. by thee] Malone explains this as a conceit. "I am past: but I will pass by thee . . ."

248, 249. he is . . . master] a strange construction: but the emendations of Rowe (he, my good lord, whom) and Pope (he, . . .) involve the omission of
"is," and seem rather bold.

Par. Ay, sir.

Laf. The devil it is that's thy master. Why dost thou garter up thy arms o' this fashion? dost make hose of thy sleeves? do other servants so? Thou wert best set thy lower part where thy nose 255 stands. By mine honour, if I were but two hours younger, I'd beat thee: methinks't thou art a general offence, and every man should beat thee: I think thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee. 260

Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.

Laf. Go to, sir; you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate; you are a vagabond and no true traveller: you are more saucy with lords and honourable personages than the 265 commission of your birth and virtue gives you heraldry. You are not worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you. [Exit.]

Par. Good, very good; it is so then: good, very good; let it be concealed awhile. 270

253. o'] Rowe (ed. 2), a Ff. 257. methinks 't] Dyce (S. Walker conj.), methinks't Ff. 1, 2.

254. make hose of thy sleeves] Halliwell cites Fairholt to show how servants used to gather up their long sleeves and tuck them into their girdles in order that those fashionable appendages might not be in the way while they were attending to their duties. (Ladies who wear fashionable sleeves will understand.)

257. methinks 't] it thinks or seems to me. Cf. "Thinks't thee" in Hamlet.

259, 260. breathe themselves upon] as an exercise for them.

263. pomegranate] Rushton suggests that this may mean "that Parolles was punished for sending a letter in a pomegranate, like Euphues's Philautus, who "At the last taking out of his closette a fayre Pomegranet and pulling all the kernelles out of it, hee wrapped his Letter in it (Arber, p. 356).

267. heraldry] rank or the right of rank. Cleveland uses the word in much the same sense when he says "she Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry" (The Hecatombe). Hamner would read "the heraldry of your birth and virtue gives you commission."

Re-enter BERTRAM.

Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!

Par. What's the matter, sweet heart?

Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have sworn, I will not bed her.

Par. What, what, sweet heart? 275

Ber. O my Parolles, they have married me!
I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits
The tread of a man's foot. To the wars!

Ber. There's letters from my mother: what the im- 280
port is, I know not yet.

Par. Ay, that would be known. To the wars, my boy!
to the wars!

He wears his honour in a box, unseen,
That hugs his kicky-wicky here at home,
Spending his manly marrow in her arms, 285
Which should sustain the bound and high curvet
Of Mars's fiery steed. To other regions!

✓ France is a stable; we that dwell in't jades;
Therefore, to the war!

Ber. It shall be so: I'll send her to my house, 290
Acquaint my mother with my hate to her,

270. Re-enter Bertram] Dyce; Enter Count Rossillion Ff (after line 268).
284. kicky-wicky] kickie-wickie F 1; kickie-wicksie F 2, 3. 287, 288. regions!
France] Capell, regions, France Ff.

280. letters] a letter, as in Latin.

286. curvet] "Amongst these salts and leaps the corvette, or curvet, was highly esteemed." It was "a certaine continuell pransing and dancing up and downe still in one place, like a beare at a stake and sometimes sideling to and fro, wherein the horse maketh as though he would faine run and cannot be suffered" (D. H. Madden quoting Gervase Markham).

And wherefore I am fled ; write to the king
 That which I durst not speak : his present gift
 Shall furnish me to those Italian fields,
 Where noble fellows strike. Wars is no strife 295
 To the dark house and the detested wife.

Par. Will this capriccio hold in thee ? art sure ?

Ber. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me.

I'll send her straight away : to-morrow

I'll to the wars, she to her single sorrow. 300

Par. Why, these balls bound ; there's noise in it. 'Tis hard :

A young man married is a man that's marr'd :

Therefore away, and leave her bravely ; go :

The king has done you wrong : but, hush ! 'tis so.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter HELENA and Clown.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly : is she well ?

Clo. She is not well ; but yet she has her health :
 she's very merry ; but yet she is not well : but

296. detested] Rowe, detected Ff.
betimes to-morrow Steevens conj.
 Delius.

299. to-morrow] even to-morrow Hanmer,
 303. her bravely ; go :] her ; bravely go :

294. furnish me to] equip with what is necessary for. "To furnish thee to Belmont" (Merchant of Venice, i. i. 182).

296. detested] In the margin of the third Folio belonging to the Capell collection an unknown hand has made the correction "detested" for "detected" (Cambridge Editors).

299. to-morrow] perhaps we should read "and to-morrow." There is evidently something missing.

301. balls bound] meaning that just as when balls bound with a noise they are as they should be, so are Bertram's words. Proverbial.

302. married . . . marr'd] a trite joke. Cf. Merry Wives, i. i. 25, "Shallow. You may by marrying.
Evans. It is marring indeed." Rushton quotes Puttenham as giving "The maide that soone married is, soone marred." Marrying marring is one of the proverbs of J. H. Sharman, p.
 144 (W. J. C.).

thanks be given, she's very well, and wants nothing i' the world; but yet she is not well. 5

Hel. If she be very well, what does she ail, that she's not very well?

Clo. Truly, she's very well indeed, but for two things. §

Hel. What two things? 10

Clo. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly! the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly!

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady!

Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine 15 own good fortunes.

Par. You had my prayers to lead them on; and to keep them on, have them still. O! my knave, how does my old lady?

Clo. So that you had her wrinkles, and I her money, 20
I would she did as you say.

Par. Why, I say nothing.

Clo. Marry, you are the wiser man; for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing. To say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to 25 have nothing, is to be a great part of your title;
which is within a very little of nothing.

11. whither] whether F 1. 16. fortunes] Capell (Heath conj.), fortune Ff
(the following "them" requires a plural noun, but it is by no means certain that Shakespeare used one).

24. shakes out] a similar metaphor occurs in the Bible. "Also I shook my lap, and said, So God shake out every man from his house, and from his labour . . . even thus be he shaken out, and emptied" (Neh. v. 13).

26. your title] Title is here used meaning "one's intrinsic value."

Par. Away! th' art a knave.

Clo. You should have said, sir, before a knave th' art a knave; that's, before me th'rt a knave: this 30 had been truth, sir.

Par. Go to, thou art a witty fool; I have found thee.

Clo. Did you find me in yourself, sir, or were you taught to find me?

Par. * * * 35

Clo. The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure and the increase of laughter.

Par. A good knave, i' faith, and well fed.
Madam, my lord will go away to-night; 40
A very serious business calls on him.
The great prerogative and rite of love,
Which, as your due, time claims, he does acknowledge,
But puts it off to a compell'd restraint;
Whose want, and whose delay, is strew'd with sweets, 45
Which they distil now in the curbed time,

35.] There can be little doubt that a speech of Parolles has been lost here. Probably (as several editors have conjectured) something equivalent to "In myself." 44. to] F 1, 2; by F 3, 4. 46. curbed time] Ff, cup of time Collier conj.

28, 29. th' art] old way of apostrophising "thou art."

32. found thee] Cf. "I have found you, your lays and out-leaps, Junius" (Beaumont and Fletcher, Bonduca, i. iii.).

36. The search, sir . . .] This passage is as it were a separate speech in the Ff; though the foregoing sentence is also given to the clown. Perhaps some remark is missing between "find me" and "the search." Parolles may have said something in which the word "search" occurred.

Collier supplies the missing speech from the MS. notes, namely, "Par. Go to, I say: I have found thee: no more; I have found thee, a witty fool."

39. well fed] Ritson suggests that this is an allusion to the old saying, "Better fed than taught," to which the clown has himself alluded in a preceding scene: "I will show myself highly fed and lowly taught."

46. curbed time] Collier suggested "cup of time," a very beautiful emendation, so plausible as to be almost convincing.

To make the coming hour o'erflow with joy,
And pleasure drown the brim.

Hel. What's his will else?

Par. That you will take your instant leave o' the king,
And make this haste as your own good proceeding, 50
Strengthen'd with what apology you think
May make it probable need.

Hel. What more commands he?

Par. That, having this obtain'd, you presently Attend his further pleasure.

Hel. In every thing I wait upon his will. 55

Par. I shall report it so. [Exit Parolles.]

Hel. [To Clown.] I pray you come, sirrah. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter LAFEU and BERTRAM.

Laf. But I hope your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approof.

Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.

Ber. And by other warranted testimony. 5

Laf. Then my dial goes not true: I took this lark for a bunting.

52. need] omitted Gould conj.

48. drown the brim] an expression often used to signify overflow, as when rivers "drown their shores."

52. probable need] a likely or plausible necessity.

53. this] refers to taking leave of the king, and the leave he was to give.

Scene v.

3. valiant approof] approved valour
(see above, I. ii. 50).

4. deliverance] speech, as elsewhere in Shakespeare.

6. took this lark . . .] "The bunting is, in feather, size, and form, so like

Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

Laf. I have then sinned against his experience and transgressed against his valour; and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent. Here he comes; I pray you, make us friends; I will pursue the amity. 10

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. [To Bertram.] These things shall be done, sir. 15

Laf. Pray you, sir, who's his tailor?

Par. Sir?

Laf. O! I know him well. Ay, sir; he, sir, 's a good workman, a very good tailor.⁴

Ber. [Aside to Parolles.] Is she gone to the king? 20

Par. She is.

Ber. Will she away to-night?

Par. As you'll have her.

Ber. I have writ my letters, casketed my treasure, given order for our horses; and to-night, when 25
I should take possession of the bride, end ere I do begin.

15. [To Bertram] Capell, omitted Ff. 18. Ay] Capell, / Ff. sir, 's] Theobald; sirs F 1 ~~sir's~~ F 2, 3, 4. 20. [Aside to Parolles] Rowe, omitted Ff. 24-27.] Arrangement as in Pope; verse Ff. 26. end] Collier, and Ff.

the skylark, as to require nice attention to discover the one from the other; it also ascends and sinks in the air nearly in the same manner; but it has little or no song, which gives estimation to the skylark" (Johnson). Barrett's Alvearie, 1580, gives it as "avis alaudae similis. . . ." Bunting and lark are frequently found together in old ballads and nursery rhymes.

9. accordingly] in proportion to his very great knowledge.

16. his tailor] your tailor.

26, 27. end . . . begin] The emendation "end" for "and" was made by someone in Lord Ellesmere's copy of the Folio. Cf. "You always end ere you begin" (Two Gentlemen of Verona, II. iv. 31).

Laf. A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner; but one that lies three thirds, and uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothings 30 with, should be once heard and thrice beaten. God save you, captain.

Ber. Is there any unkindness between my lord and you, monsieur?

Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my 35 lord's displeasure.

Laf. You have made shift to run into 't, boots and spurs and all, like him that leaped into the custard; and out of it you'll run again, rather than suffer question for your residence. 40

Ber. It may be you have mistaken him, my lord.

Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him at's prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me, there can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes. Trust 45 him not in matter of heavy consequence; I have kept of them tame, and know their natures. Farewell, monsieur: I have spoken better of you than you have or will to deserve at my hand; but we must do good against evil. [Exit. 50

Par. An idle lord, I swear.

29. one] Rowe (ed. 2), on Ff. 31. heard] hard F 1. 49. you have or will] your 'haviour wills Bulloch (conj.), have qualities or will Malone (conj.), will or will Singer (conj.), power or will Lettsom (conj.).

28. good traveller] Lafeu harps upon Parolles' boasted travels.

39. custard] Theobald says that "It was a foolery practised at city entertainments, whilst the jester . . . was in vogue, for him to jump into a large deep custard, set for the purpose. . . ."

Ben Jonson alludes to the practice in The Devil's an Ass, 1. 1.

47. kept . . . tame] I have kept some such creatures tame.

51. idle] silly. Cf. "And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not" (S. Luke

Ber. I think not so.

Par. Why, do you know him ?

Ber. Yes, I do know him well ; and common speech Gives him a worthy pass. Here comes my clog. 55

Enter HELENA.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you,
Spoke with the king, and have procur'd his leave
For present parting ; only he desires
Some private speech with you.

Ber. I shall obey his will.
You must not marvel, Helen, at my course, 60
Which holds not colour with the time, nor does
The ministration and requir'd office
On my particular : prepar'd I was not
For such a business ; therefore am I found
So much unsettled. This drives me to entreat you, 65
That presently you take your way for home ;
And rather muse than ask why I entreat you ;

52. not] S. Walker (conj.) and Singer (ed. 2), omitted Ff. 53. know him?
S. Walker (conj.) and Singer (ed. 2), not know him? Ff.

xxiv. 11). See also iv. iii. 219, below.

52, 53.] The Ff read "Ber. I think so. Par. Why, do you not know him?" That seems to be wrong. The "not" must have been put in the wrong place. Delius takes "I think so" to be a modification of "I swear." If so the original might stand—but it seems rather a far-fetched meaning.

63. On my particular] as far as I am concerned. Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, iv. ix. 20, "Forgive me in thine own particular." Also ibid., i. iii. 54, "My more particular is Fulvia's death."

67. muse] wonder. "Do not muse at me, my worthy friends" (Macbeth, iii. iv. 85). "I muse your majesty doth seem so cold" (King John, iii. i. 317). Milton (Paradise Lost, vii. 52) has "filled With admiration and deep muse"; also vi. 581, "while we suspense, Collected stood within our thoughts amused."

67. entreat you] This is probably another misprint. The expression "entreat you" occurs just above, and there can be little doubt that Shakespeare must have used some other words in the second case. S. Walker suggests the reading "dismiss you."

For my respects are better than they seem,
 And my appointments have in them a need
 Greater than shows itself at the first view 70
 To you that know them not. This to my mother.

[Giving a letter.

'Twill be two days ere I shall see you, so
 I leave you to your wisdom.

Hel. Sir, I can nothing say, but that I am
 Your most obedient servant.

Ber. Come, come, no more of that.

Hel. And ever shall 75
 With true observance seek to eke out that Wherein toward me my homely stars have fail'd
 To equal my great fortune.

Ber. Let that go:
 My haste is very great. Farewell: hie home.

Hel. Pray sir, your pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say? 80

Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe,
 Nor dare I say 'tis mine, and yet it is;
 But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal
 What law does vouch mine own.

Ber. What would you have?

Hel. Something, and scarce so much: nothing, indeed. 85

71. [Giving a letter] Rowe, omitted Ff. 73, 74. Sir, . . .] Arranged according to S. Walker's conj.; in Ff two lines, the first ending with "say." 78, 79. Let . . .] Arranged as in Pope; F 1, 2, 3 read two lines ending "farewell . . . home"; F 4 is prose.

68. respects] reasons. Cf. "This argues conscience in your grace, but the respects thereof are nice and trivial" (Richard III. III. vii. 175); Also "When such profound respects do pull you on" (King John, III. i. 318).

81. owe] possess. (See III. ii. 124, below; and II. i. 9, above.)

I would not tell you what I would, my lord :—

Faith, yes ;

Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss.

Ber. I pray you, stay not, but in haste to horse.

Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my lord. 90

Ber. Where are my other men, monsieur ? Farewell.

[Exit Helena.]

Go thou toward home ; where I will never come

Whilst I can shake my sword or hear the drum.

Away ! and for our flight.

Par.

Bravely, coragio !

[Exeunt.]

ACT III

SCENE I.—Florence. A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Flourish. Enter the DUKE OF FLORENCE, the two Frenchmen, with a troop of Soldiers.

Duke. So that from point to point now have you heard
The fundamental reasons of this war,

86, 87.] Arranged according to Dyce's conj. ; all in one line in the Ff ; Hanmer leaves out "my lord." 91. Where . . . Farewell] In the Folios the speech is a continuation of Helen's preceding one ; emendation by Theobald ; men, monsieur ?] Theobald, men ? Monsieur : Ff.

91. Where . . . men] The Ff give this to Helena. The words may belong to Bertram as Theobald suggested, but as White explains, Helena also must have had a retinue of some sort, and the speech is not nonsense in her mouth. The question is, which of the two is the more likely one to have uttered them ? The majority of editors are of the opinion that it is best to give the sentence to Bertram.

Whose great decision hath much blood let forth
And more thirsts after.

First Lord. Holy seems the quarrel
Upon your Grace's part ; black and fearful 5
On the opposer.

Duke. Therefore we marvel much our cousin France
Would in so just a business shut his bosom
Against our borrowing prayers.

Second Lord. Good my lord,
The reasons of our state I cannot yield, 10
But like a common and an outward man,
That the great figure of a council frames
By self-unable motion : therefore dare not Say what I think of it, since I have found Myself in my incertain grounds to fail 15
As often as I guess'd.

Duke. Be it his pleasure.

First Lord. But I am sure the younger of our nature, *

3. decision] action of deciding a contest. Cf. 1538, Starkey, England, II. ii. 192, "Thys causyth sutys to be long in decysyon" (New Eng. Dict.).

5. part] a dissyllable (see Abbott, § 485).

6. opposer] the people of Siena. The same construction occurs in Coriolanus, I. vi. 27, "More than I know the sound of Marcus' tongue From every meaner man."

9. Good my lord] The meaning of the passage is: "Since I can only speak of the reasons of our state as a common and an outward man who conjectures by poor guesses what the council is about, I dare not give an opinion ; for I have never been able to make a correct guess yet." The reading of the Ff may be corrupt—a line or two may be missing.

10. yield] communicate.

11. But like] except in the capacity of.

11. outward] the opposite of the phrase "inward," which occurs in Measure for Measure, III. ii. 138, "I was an inward of his."

13. self-unable motion] by the unable (weak) motion (conception) of his own self (or brains).

17. nature] Rowe changes this to "nation." But I think the word "nature" here means "birth" or "rank." In 2 Henry IV. I. i. 61, "this man's brow foretells the nature of a tragic volume," the word "nature" seems to have a distinct trace of the original meaning of the word. Again, in Troilus and Cressida, V. i. 39, Shakespeare speaks of "diminutives of nature" = by birth.

That surfeit on their ease, will day by day
Come here for physic.

Duke.

Welcome they shall be,

And all the honours that can fly from us 20

Shall on them settle. You know your places well ;

When better fall, for your avails they fell.

To-morrow to the field. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter COUNTESS and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save that he comes not along with her.

Clo. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Court. By what observance, I pray you? 5

Clo. Why, he will look upon his boot and sing ; mend the ruff and sing ; ask questions and sing ; pick his teeth and sing. I know a man that had this trick of melancholy sold a goodly manor for a song.

9. sold] F 3, 4 ; hold F 1, 2.

22. When better fall] Rolfe says, by "better" is meant "your superiors in office": adding that it speaks of places, but means those who fill the places. It may mean, "when better places happen to fall vacant or fall to your share." Cf. Macbeth, i. ii. 58, "The victory fell on us"; and King Lear, iv. v. 38, "Preferment falls on him that cuts him off."

Scene II.

6, 7. mend the ruff] As he speaks of "the" ruff and not of "his" ruff, editors have conjectured that he refers to the ruffles of his boots. According to Fairholt, the fashion of wearing these "ruffs" was introduced into England in the latter part of the sixteenth century.

9. sold] The emphasis is clearly on "for a song." The emendation "sold" (first made in F 3) has been almost universally accepted, but "hold" would do if we changed "know" to "knew." "I knew a man hold a Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means 10 to come. [Reads the letter.]

Clo. I have no mind to Isbel since I was at court.
Our [codlings] and our Isbels o' the country are nothing like your [codlings] and your Isbels o' the court: the brains of my Cupid's knocked out, 15 and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have we here?

Clo. E'en that you have there. [Exit.]

Count. I have sent you a daughter-in-law: she hath 20 recovered the king, and undone me. I have wedded her, not bedded her; and sworn to make the "not" eternal. You shall hear I am run away: know it before the report come. If there be breadth enough

11. [Reads the letter] Theobald, omitted Ff. 13. codlings Kinnear conj.;
old lings F 1; old ling F 2, 3, 4. 19. E'en Theobald, In Ff.

manor for a song" is much the same as "I never knew a man hold vile stuff so dear" (Love's Labour's Lost). Perhaps "hold" means "wager": but I cannot remember an instance of the word "hold" in this sense followed by "for."

9. manor] Perhaps any kind of fortune. Cf. Henry VIII. i. i. 83, "O many Have broke their backs with laying manors on them For this great journey." Also, Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, Part iii. sec. 2, Mem. iii. subs. 3, "'Tis an ordinary thing to put a thousand oaks and an hundred oxen into a suit of apparel, to wear a whole manor on his back."

13, 14. [codlings] Mr. Joseph Crosby wrote to Dr. Herford: "In the county of Westmoreland the peasantry have a very common word to coddle . . . If John is courting Isbel he is said to be coddling her . . . and Isbel is John's coddling." The New Eng.

Dict. says the word "codling" (quodlinge) is used figuratively applied to a raw youth. Ben Jonson, Alchemist (ed. Hart), i. i. 189, "Sub. Who is it, Dol? Dol. A fine young quodling. Fac. O, my lawyer's clarke, I lighted on last night." 1640, Shirley, Captain Underwit, iv. ii. (in Bullen, Old Plays, 1883, ii. 379), "Take a very fine young Codling heire and pound him as small as you can . . . then you must cozen him." 1663, Flaggellum; or O. Cromwell, "All the codlings and embryos of Triploe." The Ff read "old ling" or "old lings"—almost certainly a misprint; if not it must mean "the fish," more particularly the lenten fare. "When harvest is ended take shipping or ride, Ling, salt fish and herring for Lent to provide" (Tusser).

15. the brains of my Cupid's knocked out] For the plural "brains" with a singular verb, cf. Hamlet, III. i. 182; King Lear, i. v. 8.

in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty 25 to you. Your unfortunate son,

BERTRAM.

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy,
 To fly the favours of so good a king;
 To pluck his indignation on thy head 30
 By the misprising³¹ of a maid too virtuous
 For the contempt of empire.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam! yonder is heavy news within between two soldiers and my young lady.

Count. What is the matter? 35

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort; your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be killed?

Clo. 'So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he 40 does: the danger is in standing to't; that's the loss of men, though it be the getting of children.
 Here they come will tell you more; for my part,
 I only hear your son was run away. [Exit.]

Enter HELENA and two Gentlemen.

First Gent. Save you, good madam. 45

Hel. Madam, my lord is gone, for ever gone.

Second Gent. Do not say so.

35. matter?] F 3, 4; matter. F 1, 2.

31. misprising] "mispriso (says Coke) cometh of the word mes-pris, which properly signifieth neglect or contempt . . . and so mesprise is ill apprehended or known" (Rushton).

Count. Think upon patience. Pray you, gentlemen,
 I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
 That the first face of neither, on the start, 50
 Can woman me unto 't: where is my son, I pray you?
Second Gent. Madam, he's gone to serve the Duke of Florence:

We met him thitherward; for thence we came,
 And after some dispatch in hand at court,
 Thither we bend again. 55

Hel. Look on his letter, madam; here's my passport.
When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body that I am father to, then call me husband: but in such a "then" I write a "never." 60
 This is a dreadful sentence.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

First Gent. Ay, madam; and for the contents' sake are sorry for our pains.

Count. I prithee, lady, have a better cheer; 65

51. I pray you?] omitted Theobald.

51. Can woman me unto 't?] Schmidt points out that as the speaker is a woman the words "unto 't" also must be emphatic. He takes it to mean subdued like a woman to her husband. Johnson explains, "make phant as a woman"; Steevens, "i.e. affect me suddenly and deeply."

53. met him thitherward] on his way thither.

56. passport] anything which gives one free passage to anything. Cf. "A passport to her affection" (Sidney). "The Gospel has then only free admission into the assent of the understanding when it brings a passport from a rightly disposed will" (South). "His passport is his innocence and grace" (Dryden). "Fortune for a passport gave him wealth" (Harte).

57. get] take off. Hanmer suggests reading "from my finger." But Shakespeare probably had in mind the passage in Boccaccio's Giletta of Narbona—"for I doe purpose to dwell with her, when she shall have this ring (meanyng a ring which he wore) upon her finger . . ."

65. cheer] literally face. As in Midsummer Night's Dream, III. ii. 96, "all fancy-sick she is and pale of cheer." To "have a better cheer" means to look more cheerful (W. J. C.).

If thou engrossest all the griefs are thine,
 Thou robb'st me of a moiety: he was my son,
 But I do wash his name out of my blood,
 And thou art all my child. Towards Florence is he?

Second Gent. Ay, madam.

Count. And to be a soldier? 70

Second Gent. Such is his noble purpose; and, believe't,
 The duke will lay upon him all the honour
 That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither?

First Gent. Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed.

Hel. [Reading.] Till I have no wife, I have nothing in 75 France.

'Tis bitter.

Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam.

First Gent. 'Tis but the boldness of his hand, haply, which his heart was not consenting to. 80

Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife!
 There's nothing here that is too good for him
 But only she; and she deserves a lord
 That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
 And call her hourly mistress. Who was with him? 85

First Gent. A servant only, and a gentleman which I have sometime known.

Count. Parolles, was it not?

66. the griefs are] the griefs as Rowe, these griefs as (Lettsom conj.).
 70. soldier?] Pope; Ff have full stop or note of exclamation. 75. [Reading]
 Rowe, omitted Ff.

66. If thou engrossest] Steevens paraphrases the line, "If thou keepest all thy sorrows to thyself." Cf. our use of the word in "engrossing" thoughts, desires, etc.

First Gent. Ay, my good lady, he.

Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedness. 90
My son corrupts a well-derived nature with his inducement.

First Gent. Indeed, good lady, the fellow has a deal of that too much, which holds him much to have. 95

Count. Y' are welcome, gentlemen.

I will entreat you, when you see my son,
To tell him that his sword can never win
The honour that he loses: more I'll entreat you Written to bear along.

Second Gent. We serve you, madam, 100

In that and all your worthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our courtesies.

Will you draw near?

[Exeunt Countess and Gentlemen.]

Hel. "Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France." ✓

Nothing in France until he has no wife! 105

Thou shalt have none, Rousillon, none in France;

94. of that too much] Rowe, of that, too much Ff.

91. well-derived] derived, as above (i. i. 45).

91, 92. with his inducement] through his influence.

94. holds him much] The fellow has a deal of that talent for inducement, which is of so much use to him in his intercourse with Bertram. Cf. 1320, Sir Tristr. 918, "What halt it long to strue? Mi leue y take at te." 1380, Sir Ferumb. 1602, "What halt hit much her-of to telle, to drecchen ous of our lay?" (New Eng. Dict.).

102. Not so] "The Gentlemen declare that they are servants to the Countess; she replies—No otherwise than as she returns the same offices of civility" (Johnson).

104.] Surely Heine misunderstood this passage when he said that Helena's words were not quite honest—that she was playing with words—"no husband in France" meaning one in Italy (etc.)? It seems more likely that Helena did not know where she was going—except that the instinct of love was likely to lead her to the land where Bertram was—for lovers all go the same road whatever their nominal destination may be.

Then hast thou all again. Poor lord! is't I
 That chase thee from thy country, and expose
 Those tender limbs of thine to the event
 Of the none-sparing war? and is it I 110
 That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou
 Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
 Of smoky muskets? O you leaden messengers,
 That ride upon the violent speed of fire,
 Fly with false aim; move the [still-peering] air, 115
 That sings with piercing; do not touch my lord!
 Whoever shoots at him, I set him there;
 Whoever charges on his forward breast,
 I am the caitiff that do hold him to't;
 And, though I kill him not, I am the cause 120
 His death was so effected: better 'twere
 ✓ I met the ravin lion when he roar'd
 • With sharp constraint of hunger; better 'twere
 That all the miseries which nature owes

115. [still-peering] F 1, still(-)piercing F 2, 3, 4; still-pierced Nares; rove the still-piecing Tyrwhitt; now the still-pacing Jackson conj.; wound the still-piecing Collier ed. 2 (Col. MS.); move the still 'pearing Delius, 1876; still closing, still-fleeing, still-jeering, still-reeking (etc.). 116. sings F 1; stings F 2, 3, 4. 122. ravin] Capell; ravine F 1, 2, 3; rauing F 4.

115. [still-peering] This word in the first Folio is probably corrupt; it has, however, been retained in the Cambridge and Globe editions. The editors take it to mean that the air is always ready at hand, however often pierced. The later Ff have still-piercing—an obviously false attempt to better the first Folio. Nares in his Glossary proposes “still pierced,” which has the disadvantage of being unlike “still peering.” Steevens and Dyce adopt an anonymous conjecture, “still-piecing,” which is one of the best emendations. The play on the words “piecing” and “piercing” is quite in keeping with the passage, and “still piecing” gives the idea of the air being pierced without harm. In support of the reading “still ‘pearing” Delius quotes Hamlet, iv. v. 151, “It shall as level to your judgment peare” (or pierce). Of all the many conjectures, there is no reading, in my opinion, quite as good as Delius’s.

122. the ravin lion] To ravin is to swallow voraciously; cf. “The ravined salt sea shark” (Macbeth, iv. i. 24). The adjective is not elsewhere used by Shakespeare, and is perhaps a corruption of “ravening.”

124. owes] possesses, as in II. i. 9, and II. v. 81, above.

Were mine at once. No, come thou home, Rousillon,
 Whence honour but of danger wins a scar, 126
 As oft it loses all: I will be gone;
 My being here it is that holds thee hence:
 Shall I stay here to do 't? no, no, although—
 The air of paradise did fan the house, 130
 And angels offic'd all: I will be gone,
 That pitiful rumour may report my flight,
 To console thine ear. Come, night; end, day!
 For with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—Florence. Before the Duke's Palace.

Flourish. Enter DUKE, BERTRAM, PAROLLES, Soldiers, Drum and Trumpets.

Duke. The general of our horse thou art; and we,
 Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence
 Upon thy promising fortune.

Ber. Sir, it is
 A charge too heavy for my strength, but yet
 We'll strive to bear it for your worthy sake 5
 To the extreme edge of hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth,
 And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm

133. console] The only instance of the word in Shakespeare. "Console" he does not use at all, and "consolation" only twice. The word console is used by other writers, as in Brown's Vulg. Err., "What may somewhat console all men that honour virtue, we do not discover the latter scene of his misery in authors of antiquity."

Scene III.

6. extreme] accented on the first syllable to correspond to the "utmost" in Milton's imitation, "Ye see our danger on the utmost edge Of hazard."

7. play upon] Elsewhere we find Shakespeare speaking of victory playing upon the dancing banners of the French (King John, II. i. 307).

As thy auspicious mistress !

Ber.

This very day,

Great Mars, I put myself into thy file :

✓ Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove 10

A lover of thy drum, hater of love. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter COUNTESS and Steward.

Count. Alas ! and would you take the letter of her ?

Might you not know she would do as she has done,

By sending me a letter ? Read it again.

Stew. [Reads.] I am S. Jaques' pilgrim, thither gone :

Ambitious love hath so in me offended, 5

That bare-foot plod I the cold ground upon

With sainted vow my faults to have amended.

Write, write, that from the bloody course of war,

My dearest master, your dear son, may hie :

Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far 10

His name with zealous fervour sanctify :

3. letter? Pope, Letter Ff. 4. [Reads] Collier, omitted Ff. 10. peace, whilst] F 3, 4; peace. Whilst F 1, 2.

4. S. Jaques' pilgrim] Commentators have tried to give the shrine some local position. Johnson speaks of S. Jaques de Compostella in Spain, and Reed of Orleans. But Delius thinks it clear that the shrine of S. Jaques must have been in Italy, because Helena passed through Florence on her way to it.

11. His name . . . sanctify] Cf. this line with "But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy, Must sanctify his relics" (1. i. 100, above).

*His taken labours bid him me forgive ;
 I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
 From courtly friends, with camping foes to live,
 Where death and danger dogs the heels of worth :
 He is too good and fair for Death and me ; 16
 Whom I myself embrace, to set him free.*

Count. Ah ! what sharp stings are in her mildest words ;
 Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much,
 As letting her pass so : had I spoke with her, 20
 I could have well diverted her intents,
 Which thus she hath prevented.

Stew. Pardon me, madam :
 If I had given you this at over-night,
 She might have been o'erta'en ; and yet she writes,
 Pursuit would be but vain.

Count. What angel shall 25
 Bless this unworthy husband ? he cannot thrive,
 Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear
 And loves to grant, reprieve him from the wrath
 Of greatest justice. Write, write, Rinaldo,
 To this unworthy husband of his wife ; 30

15. dogs] dog Rowe. 18. Count.] Capell, omitted Ft. 19. Rinaldo] Rynaldo F 1, 3, 4 ; Rynardo F 2. 26. husband ?] F 4 ; husband, F 1, 2, 3. 29. Write, write] F 1, 3, 4 ; write and write F 2.

12. His taken labours] an indirect reference to the labours of Hercules.

15. dogs] Several editors change this to "dog." But the singular verb with two subjects occurs frequently. (See Abbott.)

19. advice] forethought or judgment. Cf. "that's not suddenly to be performed, But with advice and silent secrecy" (2 Henry VI. II. ii. 68).

23. over-night] Johnson (Dict.) says : "This seems to be used by Shakespeare as a noun (meaning night before bedtime), but by Addison more properly as a noun (night) with a preposition (over)." Addison writes : "Will ingenuously confesses that for half his life his head ached every morning with reading of men over-night" (Spectator, 105).

Let every word weigh heavy of her worth
 That he does weigh too light : my greatest grief,
 Though little he do feel it, set down sharply.
 Dispatch the most convenient messenger :
 When haply he shall hear that she is gone, 35
 He will return ; and hope I may that she,
 Hearing so much, will speed her foot again,
 Led hither by pure love. Which of them both
 Is dearest to me, I have no skill in sense
 To make distinction. Provide this messenger. 40
 My heart is heavy and mine age is weak ;
 Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak.
[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Without the Walls of Florence.

A tucket afar off. Enter old Widow of Florence, DIANA, VIOLENTA, and MARIANA, with other Citizens.

Wid. Nay, come ; for if they do approach the city, we shall lose all the sight.

Dia. They say the French count has done most honourable service.

Wid. It is reported that he has taken their greatest 5 commander, and that with his own hand he slew the duke's brother. [Tucket.] We have lost our

3. Dia.] Violenta. Cambridge Editors conj. Perhaps Violenta's part has been lost altogether, which may easily have happened. If not, it is difficult to find a place in the dialogue, in which she must necessarily have spoken. Perhaps it was she who said, "Come ; let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it," and she may then have gone away. It is to be supposed that she was not present at the end, for Helena does not invite her to dinner with the others, which she would probably have done had Violenta still been there. 7. [Tucket] Capell, omitted ff.

labour; they are gone a contrary way: hark!
you may know by their trumpets.

Mar. Come; let's return again, and suffice ourselves 10 with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French earl: the honour of a maid is her name, and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

Wid. I have told my neighbour how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion. 15

Mar. I know that knave; hang him! one Parolles:
a filthy officer he is in those suggestions for the young earl. Beware of them, Diana; their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: 20 many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the wrack of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threatens them. I hope I need 25 not to advise you further; but I hope your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known but the modesty which is so lost.

Dia. You shall not need to fear me. 30

Enter HELENA.

Wid. I hope so. Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house; thither they send one another. I'll question her.

22. is, example,] Rowe, is example Ff.

20. go under] profess to be.

24. limed] birdlime to catch birds.

24. dissuade succession] prevent imitation. An unusual use of the word.

30. fear me] be anxious about me or be obliged to frighten me.

God save you, pilgrim ! whither are you bound ?

Hel. To S. Jaques le Grand. 35

Where do the palmers lodge, I do beseech you ?

Wid. At the S. Francis here beside the port.

Hel. Is this the way ?

Wid. Ay, marry, is 't. Hark you !

[A march afar off.]

They come this way.

If you will tarry, holy pilgrim, 40

But till the troops come by,

I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd ;

The rather, for I think I know your hostess

As ample as myself.

Hel. Is it yourself ?

Wid. If you shall please so, pilgrim. 45

Hel. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

Wid. You came, I think, from France ?

Hel. I did so.

Wid. Here you shall see a countryman of yours

That has done worthy service.

Hel. His name, I pray you.

35. le] F 3, 4 ; la F 1, 2.

36. palmers] Reed explains : " Pilgrims that visited holy places ; so called from a staff, or bough of palm they were wont to carry, especially such as had visited the holy places at Jerusalem. 'A pilgrim and a palmer differed thus : a pilgrim had some dwelling-place, the palmer none ; the pilgrim travelled to some certain place, the palmer to all, and not to any one in particular ; the pilgrim might go at his own charge, the palmer must profess wilful poverty ; the pilgrim might give over his profession, the palmer must be constant, till he had the palm ; that is, victory over his ghostly enemies, and life by death ' " (Blount's Glossography, voce " Pilgrim ").

37. port] gate. The word port is frequently used in this sense ; cf. " Golden care that keepest the ports of slumber open wide " (2 Henry IV. iv. v. 24). See also Antony and Cleopatra, iv. iv. 23, and Coriolanus, i. vii. 1.

44. ample] I know your hostess as well as I know myself. Cf. " how ample you're beloved " (Timon of Athens, i. ii. 136).

Dia. The Count Rousillon : know you such a one? 50

Hel. But by the ear, that hears most nobly of him :
His face I know not.

Dia. Whatsomere he is,
He's bravely taken here. He stole from France,
As 'tis reported, for the king had married him
Against his liking. Think you it is so? 55

Hel. Ay, surely, mere the truth : I know his lady. ✓

Dia. There is a gentleman that serves the count
Reports but coarsely of her.

Hel. What's his name?

Dia. Monsieur Parolles.

Hel. O! I believe with him,
In argument of praise, or to the worth 60
Of the great count himself, she is too mean ✓
To have her name repeated : all her deserving
Is a reserved honesty, and that
I have not heard examin'd.

Dia. Alas! poor lady;
'Tis a hard bondage to become the wife 65
Of a detesting lord.

Wid. Ay, right ; good creature, wheresoe'er she is,

52. Whatsomere he is] F 3, 4; What somere he is F 1; What somere his is F 2. 56. mere the] meerlye Warburton, the mere Hammer (S. Walker conj.). 58. coarsely] Johnson, coursely Ff. 67. Ay, right ; good creature] Capell; I write good creature F 1; I right good creature F 2, 3, 4.

52. Whatsomere] Cf. "All men's faces are true, whatsomere their hands are" (Antony and Cleopatra, II. vi. 102).

53. bravely taken] thought much of.

56. mere the truth] the plain truth. The Ff read "I, surely, meere the truth." I know of no other instance of "mere the," and it may be a misprint for "the mere." Warburton reads "meerlye" for "meere the."

60. argument of praise] as for deserving praise. . . .

63. reserved honesty] a well-guarded chastity. As in Cymbeline, I. iv. 143, "I will bring from thence that honour of hers which you imagine so reserved."

64. examin'd] questioned or doubted.

67. Ay, . . . she is] F 1 here reads "I write good creature"; the other F. "I right good creature," which seems

Her heart weighs sadly. This young maid might do her

A shrewd turn if she pleas'd.

Hel. How do you mean?

May be the amorous count solicits her 70
In the unlawful purpose.

Wid. He does indeed;
And brokes with all that can in such a suit
Corrupt the tender honour of a maid:
But she is arm'd for him, and keeps her guard
In honestest defence.

Mar. The gods forbid else! 75

Enter, with drum and colours, the whole Florentine army, BERTRAM and PAROLLES.

Wid. So, now they come.

That is Antonio, the duke's eldest son;

That, Escalus.

Hel. Which is the Frenchman?

Dia. He;

That with the plume: 'tis a most gallant fellow;
I would he lov'd his wife. If he were honest 80

75. Enter . . . Parolles] before "Mar. The gods forbid else!" in Ff.

an improvement. Most editors have, however, adhered to the very obscure reading "I write," taking it to be a parallel to the "I write man" (ii. iii. 200, above), or as meaning "I declare." Rolfe, who takes this last to be the best, accepts the reading only as a choice of evils, and suspects some corruption. Rowe has "Ah! right good creature!" and Theobald, "Ah! right; good creature!" Malone conjectures "I weet good creature," but seems to accept the reading "write;" comparing it to "About it, and write happy when thou hast done," in King Lear.

69. shrewd] mischievous; not quite the same as in line 89, below, or in v. iii. 232, below. It is here used as in Antony and Cleopatra, iv. ix. 5, "the last day (of battle) was a shrewd one to us." Cf. also the old proverb, "God sendeth the shrewd cow short hornes" (J. Heywood, Prov. (Sharm.), p. 47).

He were much goodlier; is't not a handsome gentleman?

Hel. I like him well.

Dia. 'Tis pity he is not honest. ✓ Yond's that same knave
That leads him to these places: were I his lady,
I would poison that vile rascal.

Hel. Which is he? 85

Dia. That jack-an-apes with scarfs. Why is he melancholy?

Hel. Perchance he's hurt i' the battle.

Par. Lose our drum! well.

Mar. He's shrewdly vexed at something. Look, he has spied us. 90

Wid. Marry, hang you!

Mar. And your courtesy, for a ring-carrier!

[Exeunt Bertram, Parolles, Officers and Soldiers.]

Wid. The troop is past. Come, pilgrim, I will bring you Where you shall host: of enjoin'd penitents

81. gentleman?] F 2, 3, 4; Gentleman. F 1. 84. places] Ff, passes Dyce
(Lettsom conj.). 93, 94. bring you Where] bring|| you, Where F 1.

84. places] The emendation "passes" was first adopted by Dyce, and may be supported by "I perceive your grace, like power divine hath look'd upon my passes" (Measure for Measure, v. i. 375). The very doubtful reading of the Ff "places" is understood to mean common houses; which seems hardly probable, seeing that Diana's home had been visited.

86. jack-an-apes] "Precise origin uncertain . . . the word appears first as an opprobrious nickname of William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk (murdered 1450), whose badge was a clog and chain, such as was attached to a tame ape . . . 'Jack Napes' is the earliest form, of which 'Jack-a-Napes,' 'Jack of Napes' (? Napes), 'Jack-an-Ape,' 'Jack and apes,' are later perversions. 1592, Greene, Upstart Courtier, H j b, 'A jollie light timberd Jacke a Napes in a sute of watchet Taffeta.' Cf. 1623, Massinger, Bondman, II. iii., 'Here's a Jane-of-apes shall serve'" (New Eng. Dict.).

89. shrewdly vexed] Schmidt compares this use of the word "shrewdly" to the German adverb arg. It occurs again below (v. iii. 232), "You boggle shrewdly," and in Hamlet (I. iv. 1), "The air bites shrewdly."

92. ring-carrier] a term of obloquy; cf. Bandello, Tragical Discourses (Tudor Classics, ed. Fenton, 1890), vol. i. p. 151, "the he bawd of London carryeth a ring in his mouth . . . the she bawd a basket" (W. J. C.).

94. host] find a host. Cf. "Go, bear it to the Centaur where we host" (Comedy of Errors, I. ii. 9).

94. enjoin'd] bound by an oath.

There's four or five, to Great S. Jaques bound, 95
Already at my house.

Hel. I humbly thank you.
Please it this matron and this gentle maid
To eat with us to-night, the charge and thanking Shall be for me; and, to requite you further,
I will bestow some precepts of this virgin 100
Worthy the note.

Both. We'll take your offer kindly.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter BERTRAM and the two French Lords.

First Lord. Nay, good my lord, put him to't: let him have his way.

Second Lord. If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect.

First Lord. On my life, my lord, a bubble. 5

Ber. Do you think I am so far deceived in him? ✓

First Lord. Believe it, my lord, in mine own direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as my kinsman, he's a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise- 10

100. of] F 1; on F 2, 3, 4.

Scene vi.

1, 3, etc. First, Second, Lord] Speeches assigned as Rowe. Others (Camb. Edd. etc.) reverse places, following the order of Ff, Cap. E, Cap. G. See note p. 40 ante. 6. Do . . . him?] Pope's arrangement. In the Ff two lines, the first ending with far.

100. of this virgin] Cf. "What bestow of him" (Twelfth Night, III. iv. 2).

Scene vi.

3. hilding] a coward,—a term of extreme obloquy, applied also to beasts.

5. bubble] a deceptive thing, as in Swift's phrase, "The nation then too late will find . . . South Sea at best a mighty bubble." Cf. also "bubble reputation."

9. as my kinsman] as of my kinsman.

breaker, the owner of no one good quality worthy your lordship's entertainment.

Second Lord. It were fit you knew him; lest, reposing too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might at some great and trusty business in a main danger fail you. 15

Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

Second Lord. None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do. 20

First Lord. I, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him: such I will have whom I am sure he knows not from the enemy. We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents. Be but your lordship present at his examination: if he do not, for the promise of his life and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forfeit of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in any thing. 25 30

13. lest,] F 4; least, F 1, 2, 3. 26. leaguer] F 4; Leager F 1, 2, 3.

12. entertainment] Cf. below, iv. i. 15, "band of strangers i' the adversary's entertainment." Bacon's Henry VII., "He was . . . an entertainer of fortune by the day."

19, 20. fetch off his drum] It must be remembered that the loss of drums in those days was a matter of great importance, because they were decorated with the colours of the regiment. The loss was therefore equivalent to the loss of the colours.

26. leaguer] Douce quotes Sir John Smythe's Discourses: "They will not vouchsafe in their speeches or writings to use our ancient terms belonging to matters of warre, but doo call a campe by the Dutch name of 'Legar'; nor will not afford to say, that such a towne or such a fort is besieged, but that it is 'belegard.'"

Second Lord. O! for the love of laughter, let him 35 fetch his drum: he says he has a stratagem for't.
 When your lordship sees the bottom of his success in 't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be 40 removed. Here he comes.

Enter PAROLLES.

First Lord. [Aside to Bert.] O! for the love of laughter, hinder not the honour of his design:
 let him fetch off his drum in any hand.

37. his] Rowe, this Ff. 39. ore] oar Theobald, ours Ff, ores Collier MS.
 42. [Aside . . .] Capell, omitted Ff. 43. honour] humour Theobald.

39, 40. John Drum's entertainment] the same as Tom Drum's. Various passages have been collected in which this expression occurs. Theobald quotes from "an old motley interlude" (printed in 1601) called Jack Drum's Entertainment; or, The Comedy of Pasquil and Catherine. In this Jack Drum is a servant of intrigue who is ever aiming at projects, and always foiled and given the drop. Also another old piece (published in 1627) called Apollo Shroving, in which occurs: "Tom Drum's entertainment: a flap with a fox-tail. . . ." Holinshed in his description of Ireland, speaking of Patrick Sarsfield (Mayor of Dublin in 1551) and of his extravagant hospitality, subjoins that "no guest had ever a cold or forbidding look: so that his porter durst not for both his eares give the simplest man that resorted to his house, Tom Drum his entertaynment, which is, to hale a man in by the heade, and thrust him out by both the shoulders." Malone quotes a passage from the above-mentioned motley interlude: "In faith good gentlemen,

I think we shall be forced to give you right John Drum's entertainment (i.e. treat you very ill) . . ." Reed finds in Taylor's Laugh and be Fat, "Mons^r Odcome Who on his owne backe-side receiv'd his pay Not like the entertainm^t of Jacke Drum Who was best welcome when he went away." Also in Manners and Customs of all Nations (ed. Aston, 1611, 4to, p. 280), "Some others on the contrarie part, give them John Drum's intertainm^t reviling and beating them away from their houses." But little clew is given as to the origin of the phrase except in such phrases as "Oh, it's a most precious fool, make much of him. I can compare him to nothing more happily than a drum, for everyone may play upon him" (Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, III. i.).

44. in any hand] Cf. with this phrase "at any hand" (Taming of the Shrew, I. ii. 147, 227), and "Of all hands" (Love's Labour's Lost, IV. iii. 219). The expression "in any hand" occurs over and over again in Holland's Pliny (pp. 456, 508, 553, etc.).

Ber. How now, monsieur! this drum sticks sorely in 45 your disposition.

Second Lord. A pox on 't! let it go: 'tis but a drum.

Par. "But a drum!" Is't "but a drum"? A drum so lost! There was excellent command,—to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, 50 and to rend our own soldiers! *

Second Lord. That was not to be blamed in the command of the service: it was a disaster of war that Cæsar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command. 55

Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success:
some dishonour we had in the loss of that drum;
but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have been recovered.

Ber. It might; but it is not now. 60

Par. It is to be recovered. But that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or hic jacet.

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach, to't, monsieur; if 65 you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this instrument of honour again into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise and go on; I will grace the attempt for a worthy

65. *a stomach, to't, monsieur; if] a stomacke, too't Monsieur: if F 1; a stomacke: too't Monsieur: if F 2; a stomach to't, Monsieur: if F 3, 4. 68.
magnanimous] magnanumious F 1.*

49. There was an excellent command] under a separate heading, meaning professional skill. The word may be com-—used sarcastically of course. pared with "craft," which is still used

66. mystery in stratagem] Schmidt in much the same way.
places this instance of the word mystery exploit: if you speed well in it, the duke shall 70 both speak of it, and extend to you what further becomes his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it. 75

Par. I'll about it this evening: and I will presently pen down my dilemmas, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation, and by midnight look to hear further from me.

Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his grace you are 80 gone about it?

Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord;
but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know th'art valiant; and to the possibility of thy soldiership, will subscribe for thee. Fare- 85 well.

Par. I love not many words. [Exit.

First Lord. No more than a fish loves water. Is not this a strange fellow, my lord, that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows 90

81. it?] Rowe (ed. 2), it. Ff.

77. dilemmas] occurs only twice in Shakespeare. Cf. "In perplexity and doubtful dilemma" (Merry Wives, iv. v. 87). The word seems to be used in its primitive sense of "an argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions." He was going to pen them down in order to argue them out in his favour, "encourage himself in his certainty."

78. mortal preparation] preparation for the end of mortal life. Cf. "pay his breath to time and mortal custom" (Macbeth, iv. i. 100). A schoolboy might idiomatically substitute "mortal funk."

84. the possibility] the capability. Johnson quotes from Rogers, "Example not only teaches us our duty, but convinces us of the possibility of our imitation."

87. I love . . . words] This passage supports the conjecture that Parolles' name is derived from the French paroles. It is, however, a trisyllable, it having been thus pronounced at that time in England. Cotgrave writes parolles.

is not to be done; damns himself to do, and dares better be damned than to do't?

Second Lord. You do not know him, my lord, as we do: certain it is that he will steal himself into a man's favour, and for a week escape a great deal 95 of discoveries; but when you find him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why, do you think he will make no deed at all of this that so seriously he does address himself unto?

First Lord. None in the world; but return with an 100 invention, and clap upon you two or three probable lies. But we have almost embossed him, you shall see his fall to-night; for indeed he is not for your lordship's respect.

Second Lord. We'll make you some sport with the 105 fox ere we case him. He was first smoked by the old lord Lafeu: when his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sprat you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.

First Lord. I must go look my twigs: he shall be 110 caught.

92. do't?] Theobald; do't F 1, 2; do't F 3, 4. 96. discoveries] discovery S. Walker (conj.); out] one Daniel (conj.). 101, 102. probable] improbable S. Walker (conj.), palpable Proescholdt. 110, 111. I . . . caught] given to the former speaker by Capell. One line in Pope; two in Ff, the first ending with twigs.

95. deal] Not often used with a plural. New Eng. Dict. gives, 1597, Gerarde, Herbal, I. xxxi. § 1, 42, "Nothing else but a deale of flocks set and thrust together."

102. embossed] "To emboss a deer is to enclose him in a wood" (Johnson).

106. case him] strip him naked. Cf. "Pompey is uncasing for the combat" (Love's Labour's Lost, v. ii. 707). New Eng. Dict. gives, 1803, Rees. Cycl.

c v. Casings, "They say, flay a deer, case a hare."

106. smoked] Cf. IV. i. 28, below, "They begin to smoke me." Johnson gives two instances from Addison: "Will Trippet begins to be smoked"—"I began to smoke that they were a parcel of mummers." Also from Hudibras, "He hither came to observe and smoke." The meaning is obvious.

110. I . . . twigs] The metaphor of

Ber. Your brother he shall go along with me.

First Lord. As't please your lordship: I'll leave you.

[Exit

Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show you
The lass I spoke of.

Second Lord. But you say she's honest. 115

Ber. That's all the fault. I spoke with her but once,
And found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her,
By this same coxcomb that we have i' the wind,
Tokens and letters which she did resend;
And this is all I have done. She's a fair creature; 120
Will you go see her?

Second Lord. With all my heart, my lord.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter HELENA and Widow.

Hel. If you misdoubt me that I am not she,
I know not how I shall assure you further,
But I shall lose the grounds I work upon.

Wid. Though my estate be fall'n, I was well born,
Nothing acquainted with these businesses; 5

113. Exit] Theobald, omitted Ff.

Scene VII.

5. businesses] basenesses Anon. conj.

limed twigs, as above, III. v. 24.
"Look" is used transitively, as often elsewhere.

118. have i' the wind] a proverbial saying akin to the modern phrase "to be in the wind of."

Scene VII.

3. lose the grounds] Helena could give no further proof of her identity, save by revealing herself to the Count himself—
the very thing she did not wish to do.

And would not put my reputation now
In any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you.

First, give me trust, the count he is my husband,
And what to your sworn counsel I have spoken
Is so from word to word ; and then you cannot, 10
By the good aid that I of you shall borrow,
Err in bestowing it.

Wid. I should believe you ;
For you have show'd me that which well approves
You're great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far, 15
Which I will over-pay and pay again
When I have found it. The count he woos your daughter,
Lays down his wanton siege before her beauty,
Resolved to carry her : let her in fine consent,
As we'll direct her how 'tis best to bear it. 20
Now his important blood will nought deny
That she'll demand : a ring the county wears,
That downward hath succeeded in his house
From son to son, some four or five descents

8. count he] County Dyce (S. Walker conj.), also line 17, below. 14.
You're] Y' are Ff. 19. Resolved] Collier ; Resolue F 1 ; Resolves F 2, 3, 4.

9. your sworn counsel] Schmidt explains "counsel" as being "privity to another's secret thoughts," as when Othello says, "He was of my counsel in my whole course of wooing" (III. iii. 111). "Sworn counsel" = bound by oath to secrecy.

21. important blood] Johnson calls this a corrupt use of the word, but it seems to tally singularly well with the French important. Shakespeare uses it frequently in this sense: "your important letters" (Comedy of Errors, v. i. 138); "if the prince be too important, tell him there is measure in every thing" (Much Ado, II. i. 74). See W. J. Craig's note on King Lear, iv. iv. 26.

22. county] count, as elsewhere.

Since the first father wore it: this ring he holds 25
 In most rich choice; yet in his idle fire,
 To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
 Howe'er repented after.

Wid. . . . Now I see
 The bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You see it lawful then. It is no more, 30
 But that your daughter, ere she seems as won,
 Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;
 In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
 Herself most chastely absent. After this,
 To marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns 35
 To what is past already.

Wid. I have yielded.
 Instruct my daughter how she shall persevere,
 That time and place with this deceit so lawful May prove coherent. Every night he comes
 With musics of all sorts and songs compos'd 40
 To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us
 To chide him from our eaves, for he persists
 As if his life lay on 't.

Hel. Why then to-night
 Let us assay our plot; which, if it speed,
 Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed, 45
 And lawful meaning in a lawful act,

28, 29. Now . . . purpose] Capell's arrangement; in one line in the Ff.
 34. After this] F 2, 3, 4; after F 1. 41. steads] F 4; steeds F 1, 2, 3.
 46. lawful meaning] unlawful meaning Hanmer; a lawful act] a wicked act
 Warburton, a lawless act Anon. conj.

26. In most rich choice] in very high esteem. Cf. Evelyn's Kalendar, "Carry into the shade such auriculas, seedlings or plants, as are for their choiceness reserved in pots."

26. idle] See II. v. 51, above.
 40, 41. compos'd To her unworthi- ness] composed with unworthy purpose to her.

Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact.
But let's about it.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—Without the Florentine Camp.

Enter Second French Lord, with five or six Soldiers in ambush.

Second Lord. He can come no other way but by this hedge-corner. When you sally upon him, speak what terrible language you will: though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him, unless some one among 5 us, whom we must produce for an interpreter.

First Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter.

Second Lord. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?

First Sold. No, sir, I warrant you. 10

Enter Second French Lord] Camb. Edd.; Enter one of the Frenchmen Ff.
See note on Act II. Scene 1. 1. Sec. Lord] 1 Lord E. Ff. 7. captain]
F 3, 4; captaine F 1; captaine F 2.

47. Where . . . fact] Either corrupt or purposely obscure. The meaning of the whole passage as it stands seems to be that the deed is lawful and yet is meant to be wrong by Bertram; that both happen to be innocent—and yet guilty, he of wantonness, she of deception. If any change be called for we might read “and yet a sin full act.”

Act IV. Scene 1.

2. hedge corner] In Shakespeare's day hedges were not frequent: the country was not generally enclosed until long after, and so a hedge surrounding a garden or field would be a prominent object, and one to which a hunted animal would escape for refuge.

Second Lord. But what linsey-woolsey hast thou to speak to us again?

First Sold. E'en such as you speak to me.

Second Lord. He must think us some band of strangers i' the adversary's entertainment. Now he hath 15 a smack of all neighbouring languages; therefore we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak one to another; so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: choughs' language, gabble enough, and 20 good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic. But couch, ho! here he comes, to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges.

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Ten o'clock: within these three hours 'twill be 25 time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausible invention that carries it. They begin to smoke me, 15. adversary's] Johnson, adversaries Ff, adversaries' Warburton. 20.

choughs'] F 3, 4; choughs F 1, 2.

11. linsey-woolsey] An intelligible mixture of several languages. Johnson quotes Hudibras, "A lawless linsey-woolsey brother Half of one order, half another." The New Eng. Dict. traces this word back to the Cath. Aug. 1483 (Old Eng. Lat. Dict.), and the Dial. Dict. says it is alive in Hereford near the Welsh border. Also in Cumberland in the form of "Listy-wunsty."

14, 15. strangers . . . entertainment] foreign troops in the enemy's pay (Johnson). Cf. note on III. vi. 12, above.

19. know straight] Hanmer reads

"shew straight," and Collier "Go straight to." The expression "know straight" seems here to mean "know our mind, our purpose." Malone would explain it, "Our seeming to know what we speak one to another is to make him to know our purpose immediately; to discover our design to him."

20. choughs' language] jackdaws' gabble.

27. plausible] plausible. Shakespeare uses both words indiscriminately.

28. smoke me] See note above, III. vi. 106.

and disgraces have of late knocked too often at my door. I find my tongue is too foolhardy; 30 but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

Second Lord. This is the first truth that e'er thine own tongue was guilty of. 35

Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must give myself some hurts, and say I got them in exploit. Yet slight ones will 40 not carry it: they will say, "Came you off with so little?" and great ones I dare not give. Wherefore, what's the instance? Tongue, I must put you into a butter-woman's mouth, and buy myself another of Bajazet's mule, if you prattle me into 45 these perils.

Second Lord. Is it possible he should know what he is, and be that he is?

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn, or the breaking of my Spanish sword. 50

Second Lord. We cannot afford you so.

40. in exploit] in the exploit W. J. Craig (conj.). 45. Bajazet's] Bajazeth's F 1; Bajazeths F 2, 3, 4; Balaam's Addis conj.; mule] F 1, 2; mules F 3, 4; mute Hanmer (Warburton). 48. is?] F 4; 25. F 1, 2, 3.

43. what's the instance?] Parolles asks himself, what proof can he possibly give? "What instance gives Lord Warwick for his vow?" (2 Henry VI. III. ii. 159); "I have received a certain instance that Glendower is dead" (2 Henry IV. III. i. 103), etc.

45. Bajazet's mule] Parolles is meditating on the possibility of having to get rid of his tongue because it wags too much, and to buy a less talkative one. But why he should buy from Bajazet's mule is a mystery. Hanmer read "mute," and explained, "I'll buy a tongue that never speaks."

51. afford you so] we cannot afford it to you so, we cannot allow you to have it so cheap.

Par. Or the baring of my beard, and to say it was in stratagem.

Second Lord. 'Twould not do.

Par. Or to drown my clothes, and say I was stripped. 55

Second Lord. Hardly serve.

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel—

Second Lord. How deep?

Par. Thirty fathom. 60

Second Lord. Three great oaths would scarce make that be believed.

Par. I would I had any drum of the enemy's: I would swear I recovered it.

Second Lord. You shall hear one anon. 65

Par. A drum now of the enemy's,— [Alarum within.

Second Lord. Throca movousus, cargo, cargo, cargo.

All. Cargo, cargo, cargo, villianda par corbo, cargo.

Par. O! ransom, ransom! Do not hide mine eyes.
[They seize and blindfold him.

First Sold. Boskos thromuldo boskos. 70

Par. I know you are the Muskos' regiment;
And I shall lose my life for want of language.
If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch,

52. baring] paring F 4. 58. citadel—] Theobald, citadell. Ff. 60. fathom] Rowe, fadome Ff. 66. enemy's,—] Camb. Edd., enemy's! Malone, enemies! Theobald, enemies. Ff. 69. O . . . eyes] Pope's arrangement; two lines in Ff; They . . . him] Rowe, omitted Ff. 70. First Soldier] throughout these scenes described as "Interpreter" in the Ff. 71. Muskos] Capell, Muskos Ff.

52. baring] shaving. "Shave the head and tie the beard, and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared before his death" (Measure for Measure, IV. ii. 189).

53. stratagem] the carrying out of the stratagem. Cf. III. vi. 66, above.

55. drown] Cf. Tempest, v. i. 57, "I'll drown my book."

Italian, or French, let him speak to me :

I will discover that which shall undo 75

The Florentine.

First Sold. Boskos vauvado : I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue : Kerelybonto, Sir, betake thee to thy faith, for seventeen poniards are at thy bosom. 80

Par. O !

First Sold. O ! pray, pray, pray. Manka revania dulce.

Second Lord. Oscorbidulchos volivorco.

First Sold. The general is content to spare thee yet ;
And, hoodwink'd as thou art, will lead thee on 85
To gather from thee : haply thou may'st inform Something to save thy life.

Par. O ! let me live,
And all the secrets of our camp I'll show,
Their force, their purposes ; nay, I'll speak that Which you will wonder at.

First Sold. But wilt thou faithfully ? 90

Par. If I do not, damn me.

First Sold. Acordo linta.

Come on ; thou art granted space.

[Exit, with Parolles guarded.

A short alarum within.

Second Lord. Go, tell the Count Rousillon, and my brother,
We have caught the woodcock, and will keep him muffled

Till we do hear from them.

75, 76.] Arranged as in Malone ; one line in Ff.

82. pray, pray] Used in the same 94. woodcock] a bird supposed to connection as "betake thee to thy have no brains, and often used instead faith." of "fool."

Second Sold. Captain, I will. 95

Second Lord. A' will betray us all unto ourselves :

Inform on that.

Second Sold. So I will, sir.

Second Lord. Till then I'll keep him dark and safely lock'd. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter BERTRAM and DIANA.

Ber. They told me that your name was Fontibell.

Dia. No, my good lord, Diana.

Ber. Titled goddess ;
And worth it, with addition ! But, fair soul,
In your fine frame hath love no quality ?
If the quick fire of youth light not your mind, 5
You are no maiden, but a monument :
When you are dead you should be such a one
As you are now, for you are cold and stern ;
And now you should be as your mother was
When your sweet self was got. 10

Dia. She then was honest.

Ber. So should you be.

97. Inform on that] Inform 'em that Rowe and Dyce.

Scene II.

Enter . . .] Enter Bertram and the Maide called Diana Ff. 2. Titled goddess ;] Titl'd, goddess Capell. 6. monument :] monument F 1.

97. Inform on that] Dyce says, "It appears to me that the context positively requires 'em.'"

Scene II.

11. should] means "would."

Dia.

No:

My mother did but duty ; such, my lord,
As you owe to your wife.

Ber.

No more o' that !

I prithee do not strive against my vows. . .
I was compell'd to her ; but I love thee 15
By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever
Do thee all rights of service.

Dia.

Ay, so you serve us }

Till we serve you ; but when you have our roses,
You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves,
And mock us with our bareness.

Ber.

How have I sworn ! 20

Dia. 'Tis not the many oaths that makes the truth,
But the plain single vow that is vow'd true.
What is not holy, that we swear not by,
But take the high'st to witness : then, pray you,
tell me,
If I should swear by Jove's great attributes, 25
I lov'd you dearly, would you believe my oaths,

19. barely] basely Rowe (ed. 2), merely Lettsom conj. 25. Jove's] F 3, 4 ; Joves F 1, 2 ; God's Globe ed. (Camb. Edd. conj.) ; love's Grant White (Johnson conj.).

14. my vows] Malone quotes Webster, Vittoria Corombona (1612), "Henceforth I'll never lie with thee, My vow is fix'd"; implying that the present passage is to be understood in the same sense.

21. etc.] This passage has been held to be corrupt by many editors. In line 25 Johnson said he could hardly distinguish whether the word in F 1 was Jove or Love. Jove, the more difficult version of the two, has been accepted, and I think there can be no doubt that that is the word printed in the 1623 Folio. But it is possible that Shakespeare wrote love : possible also that he wrote God, and that, as Halliwell conjectured, God was erased on account of the law against profanity. The whole passage lends itself to emendation. Staunton proposed to give Bertram the words, "Then . . . ill?" and Johnson, "What . . . witness." In the Collier MS. the whole passage from "What is . . . against him" is erased.

When I did love you ill? This has no holding,
 To swear by him whom I protest to love,
 That I will work against him: therefore your oaths
 Are words and poor conditions, but unseal'd; 30
 At least in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it.

Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy;
 And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts
 That you do charge men with. Stand no more off,
 But give thyself unto my sick desires, 35
 Who then recovers: say thou art mine, and ever
 My love as it begins shall so persever.

Dia. [I see that men make rope's in such a scarre
 That we'll forsake ourselves.] Give me that ring.✓

Ber. I'll lend it thee, my dear; but have no power 40
 To give it from me.

Dia. Will you not, my lord?

28. To swear . . . love] To swear (by Him) that I will work against him Whom I protest to love (Addis conj.); by him] to him Rann (Johnson conj.); whom] when Singer; protest] attest Johnson conj., profess Harris conj., Becket proposes "and to protest I love Whom I will work against." 29. That I will . . .] While that I did Herr conj., Hudson conj. omitted "him." 30. but] best Williams conj., yet Herr conj. 32. holy-cruel] Theobald, holy cruell Ff. 38, 39. [I see . . . ourselves] make rope's in such a scarre F 1, 2; make ropes in such a scarre F 3; make ropes in such a scar F 4. More than a score of readings are to be found in various editions (Cambridge ed. gives twenty-five).

27. holding] consistency (Johnson and Schmidt). Cf. "Thou sayest well, and it holds well too" (1 Henry IV. 1. ii. 34).

28. by] no doubt an error for to.

32. holy-cruel] This is a strange expression, and possibly corrupt. Perhaps we should read "wholly cruel." The play on the words gives some support to the conjecture.

36. Who then recovers] "Who" refers either to Bertram's self (in which case this is another instance of phrase logically but not grammatically correct), or else to the desires, which involves two unusual constructions—"who" after "desires" and a singular verb.

38.] No emendation has yet been proposed which is quite satisfactory and clears away all the difficulties of a passage which is, without doubt, corrupt. It is generally supposed that the phrase must convey some excuse for asking for the ring, for the sudden change of tactics.

Ber. It is an honour longing to our house,
 Bequeathed down from many ancestors,
 Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world
 In me to lose.

Dia. Mine honour's such a ring: . 45
 My chastity's the jewel of our house,
 Bequeathed down from many ancestors,
 Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world
 In me to lose. Thus your own proper wisdom Brings in the champion honour on my part 50
 Against your vain assault.

Ber Here, take my ring:
 My house, mine honour, yea, my life, be thine,
 And I'll be bid by thee.

Dia. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber-window.
 I'll order take my mother shall not hear. 55
 Now will I charge you in the band of truth,
 When you have conquer'd my yet maiden bed,
 Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me.
 My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them
 When back again this ring shall be deliver'd: ✓ 60
 And on your finger in the night I'll put Another ring, that what in time proceeds
 May token to the future our past deeds.
 Adieu, till then; then, fail not. You have won
 A wife of me, though there my hope be done. 65

Ber. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee.

[Exit.

Dia. For which live long to thank both heaven and me!

42. longing] belonging, as often in Shakespeare. 56. band of truth] Cf. "Thy oath and band" (= bond) (Richard II. I. i. 2).

You may so in the end.

My mother told me just how he would woo,
 As if she sat in 's heart; she says all men 70
 Have the like oaths: he had sworn to marry me
 When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him
 When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braid, Marry that will, I live and die a maid:
 Only in this disguise I think't no sin 75
 To cozen him that would unjustly win. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Florentine Camp.

Enter the two French Lords, and some two or three Soldiers.

First Lord. You have not given him his mother's letter?

Second Lord. I have delivered it an hour since: there

71. had] F1, has Dyce, hath Capell. 74. I] F 1, 2; I'le F 3, 4.

Scene III.

2. letter?] Rowe, letter Ff.

71. he had] he would have.

73. braid] Of doubtful meaning. Stevens quotes Greene, Never too Late (1616), "Dian rose with all her maids Blushing thus at love his braids." Also Thomas Drant's translation of Horace's Epistles, "Professing thee a friend, to plaie the ribbalde at a brade." In the Romaunt of the Rose, v. 1336, "braid seems to mean forth-with or at a jerk, answering the French tantôt. Cf. "The Ancient Song of Lytyl Thanke" (MS. Cotton, Titus Andronicus, xxvi.), "But in come frankelyn at a braid" = on a sudden. Boswell thinks Mr. Boaden's suggestion may be correct, namely, that it means fickle, apt to start away suddenly from engagements. "To braid" for to start is found in Lord Buckhurst and many old writers. Richardson makes it mean violent. Webster derives it from "to braid," knit, hence knit a net, draw into a net, deceive. Schmidt and Johnson also give deceitful. In Pericles, i. i. 93, we find, "'twould braid yourself too near for me to tell it," in which case, if we allow the analogy, the phrase means "since Frenchmen are so blamed, accused." The New Eng. Dict. throws no new light on this word "of doubtful meaning and origin," which proves how difficult it is to obtain new illustrations of its use.

is something in 't that stings his nature; for on the reading it he changed almost into another man. 5

First Lord. He has much worthy blame laid upon him for shaking off so good a wife and so sweet a lady.

Second Lord. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even tuned his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you 10 a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly within you.

First Lord. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

Second Lord. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman here in Florence, of a most chaste renown; and this 15 night he fleshes his will in the spoil of her honour:
he hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.

First Lord. Now, God delay our rebellion! as we are ourselves, what things are we. 20

19. delay] allay Hanmer; rebellion! as] rebellion, as F 3, 4; rebellion as F 1, 2.

5. another man] Karl Elze understands this to mean moral change. More probably it means merely growing pale. Mr. W. J. Craig quotes, "At the reading of the letter he looked like a man of another world" (Jew of Malta, iv. iv. 67).

6. worthy] deserved. "This superficial tale is but a preface of her worthy praise" (1 Henry VI. v. v. 11). Also, "Hate turns one or both to worthy danger and deserved death" (Richard II. v. i. 68).

16. fleshes] satiates. Cf. "The wild dog shall flesh his tooth on every innocent" (2 Henry IV. iv. v. 133). Also, Jonson's Every Man in his Humour (ii. ii.), "Brainworm. I am fleshed now I have sped so well."

17. monumental] preserving memory. Cf. the use of "monument" in Pope's letter to Swift, "Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their own writings."

18. made . . .] a made man = a fortunate man. Cf. Othello, i. ii. 51, "he's made for ever." (Also Midsummer Night's Dream, iv. ii. 18.)

18. composition] pact. Cf. "The twelfth of August, Shoonchouen was by composition yielded to the enemy (1575). In August the Prince of Conde with his armie . . . tooke Ruermonde and Lennen by composition" (A Briefe Cronicle . . . of the Low Countries, Germanie, Italy, etc. 1598). Cf. i. i. 209, above.

19. delay] Hanmer would read "allay": surely the original is correct. "May God make us slow to rebel." Dr. Hudson quotes Spenser, The Faerie Queene, ii. 6, 40, "The hasty heat of his avowd revenge delayd." And in his 30th Sonnet, "That my exceeding

Second Lord. Merely our own traitors: and as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends, so he that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream o'erflows himself. 25

First Lord. Is it not meant damnable in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company to-night?

Second Lord. Not till after midnight, for he is 30 dieted to his hour.

First Lord. That approaches apace: I would gladly have him see his company anatomized, that he heat is not delayed by her hart-frozen cold." In support of "allay" Williams says: "It is not . . . clear why the First Lord should wish such rebellions to be delayed, as no advantage could arise from mere postponement, and the poet himself warns us that 'delays have dangerous ends.' The error probably originated in a very pardonable mishearing of the first two letters. I read—Now God allay our rebellion. Cf. Henry VIII. i. i. 149, 'If with the sap of reason you would quench, Or but allay, the fire of passion . . . ' If it be urged that delay (French, délayer) was originally the same as allay, I can only reply that, although Spenser may thus have used it, Shakespeare appears nowhere to have so employed it."

21. in] is Keightley conj. 23. till] ere Hanmer, when Mason conj., while W. J. Craig conj. 25.] Punctuation by Theobald; nobility in . . . stream, Ff. 27. meant damnable] Ff; Hanmer reads "most damnable," an emendation accepted by S. Walker, Dyce, and Proescholdt. 31. dieted] ted Daniel conj. 33. company] companion Hanmer.

19, 20. are ourselves] unaided by God. 23, 24. abhorred ends] The meaning of the passage seems to be: "Just as in common course of all treasons, we always see them betray themselves and, in the long-run, come to their awful punishments, so Bertram, who by this deed alone contrives against his own nobility, covers himself still more in shame by publishing it." This is borne out by the next passage, "Is it not meant damnable in us to be the trumpeters" (etc.). Steevens takes "abhorred ends" to mean "the loathsome ends they aim at." Delius says that "till" = before. The construction is not an easy one to translate exactly.

27. Is it . . . in us] "Do we not willingly incur damnation by being trumpeters of . . . ?" Schmidt explains it, "Is not our drift a damnable one?" With the expression "meant damnable" cf. our phrase "I meant good" (evil).

31. dieted] perhaps corrupt; see note v. iii. 221. Daniel conjectures "tied to his hour," and quotes, "I'll not be tied to hours nor 'pointed times'" (Taming of the Shrew, III. i. 19).

33. company] Parolles.

might take a measure of his own judgments, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeit. 35

Second Lord. We will not meddle with him till he come, for his presence must be the whip of the other.

First Lord. In the meantime, what hear you of these wars?

Second Lord. I hear there is an overture of peace. 40

First Lord. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

Second Lord. What will Count Rousillon do then?
will he travel higher, or return again into France?

First Lord. I perceive by this demand, you are not altogether of his council. 45

Second Lord. Let it be forbid, sir; so should I be a great deal of his act.

First Lord. Sir, his wife some two months since fled from his house: her pretence is a pilgrimage to S. Jaques le Grand; which holy undertaking 50 with most austere sanctimony she accomplished;
and, there residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.

Second Lord. How is this justified? 55

First Lord. The stronger part of it by her own letters,

35. curiously] F 1, 2; seriously F 3, 4. 56. stronger] stranger Collier
(ed. 2) MS.

34. judgments] Ff. Pope reads judgment, a correction which is supported by S. Walker.

35. curiously] most carefully; or, perhaps, in a costly manner. See I.
ii. 20, above.

35. set] like a counterfeit jewel.

43. higher] probably "further inland." See article, II. i. 12, 13.

51. sanctimony] here used in the old sense of sanctity (in Othello Shakespeare used it as we use it). Cf. "If vows be sanctimonies . . . if sanctimony be the gods' delight" (Trionus and Cressida, v. ii. 139).

55. justified] proved. Cf. "Say't and justify it" (Winter's Tale, I. ii.
278). Also, "I could justify you traitors" (Tempest, v. i. 128).

56. stronger part] "main part"

which makes her story true, even to the point of her death: her death itself, which could not be her office to say is come, was faithfully confirmed by the rector of the place. 60

Second Lord. Hath the count all this intelligence?

First Lord. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

Second Lord. I am heartily sorry that he'll be glad of this. 65

First Lord. How mightily sometimes we make us comforts of our losses!

Second Lord. And how mightily some other times we drown our gain in tears! The great dignity that his valour hath here acquired for him shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample. 70

First Lord. The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together: our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues. 75

Enter a Servant.

How now! where's your master?

Serv. He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave: his lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king. 80

62, 63. point from point] Ff, from point to point Hammer, point for point Capell. 69. gain] gains Camb. Edd. conj. 70. acquired] requir'd F 3, 4.

(Dyce). However, in his second edition, Dyce adopts Collier's correction "the stranger part," which also appeared, apparently through a misprint, in his first edition.

60. rector] ruler, governor.

74. our crimes . . .] we should despair on account of our crimes, had we not our virtues to console us.

Second Lord. They shall be no more than needful there, if they were more than they can commend.

First Lord. They cannot be too sweet for the king's tartness. Here's his lordship now. 85

Enter BERTRAM.

How now, my lord! is't not after midnight?

Ber. I have to-night dispatched sixteen businesses, a month's length a-piece, by an abstract of success: I have congied with the duke, done my adieu with his nearest, buried a wife, mourned for her, writ 90 to my lady mother I am returning, entertained my convoy; and between these main parcels of dispatch effected many nicer needs: the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.

Second Lord. If the business be of any difficulty, and 95 this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.

Ber. I mean, the business is not ended, as fearing to hear of it hereafter. But shall we have this dialogue between the fool and the soldier? Come, 100 bring forth this counterfeit module: has deceived me, like a double-meaning prophesier.

84. First Lord] Ber. F 1, 2; Cap. G. F 3, 4. In the Ff Bertram is made to enter after "can commend" (line 83). 89. congied] Ff; conge'd Capell. 93. effected] F 3, 4; affected F 1, 2. 101. module] Ff, medal Hanmer (Warburton), model Collier; has] F 2; has F 1; 'has F 3, 4.

88. an abstract of success] "a string of successes," as we might say. "By a successful summary proceeding" (Schmidt). H. T., already quoted, gives "an abstract = an abridgment; success = succession; so that this phrase may mean in quick succession."

89. congied with] taken leave of (French, conge). It occurs as a noun, "congy." Shakespeare does not use the word elsewhere.

101. module] same as model. Cf. "All this thou seest is but a clod And module of confounded royalty" (King John, v. vii. 58).

102. double-meaning] zweideutig,

Second Lord. Bring him forth. [Exeunt Soldiers.

Has sat i' the stocks all night, poor gallant knave.

Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved it, in usurp- 105
ing his spurs so long. How does he carry himself?

First Lord. I have told your lordship already, the stocks carry him. But to answer you as you would be understood; he weeps like a wench that had shed her milk: he hath confessed him- 110 self to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance to this very instant disaster of his setting i' the stocks; and what think you he hath confessed?

Ber. Nothing of me, has a? 115

Second Lord. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

* Re-enter Soldiers, with PAROLLES.

Ber. A plague upon him! muffled! he can say nothing of me. 120

First Lord. Hush! hush! Hoodman comes! Portotartarossa.

First Sold. He calls for the tortures: what will you say without 'em?

104. Has] has F 4; ha's F 1, 2, 3. Steevens proposes "he has" here and just above. But below we find (line 115) ha's a (F 1, 2, 3), has a (F 4), where it clearly means "has he"; hence "ha s" of F 1 probably stands for has—the he in both cases (101 and 104) having been dropped. 115. has a?] ha's a F 1, 2, 3; has a F 4; has he Rowe (ed. 2). 118. Re-enter . . .] Enter Parolles with his interpreter Ff. 121.] The Ff give the "Hush!" to Bertram (F 2, 3, 4, hush.).

undoubtedly a reference to the oracles which could be understood to mean yes or no.

119. Re-enter . . .] See an account of the examination of one of Henry VIII.'s captains, who had gone over to the enemy (which may possibly have suggested this of Parolles) in The Life of Jacke Wilton, 1594, sig. c. iii. Ritson. 121. Hoodman comes] an allusion to the game of blind man's buff, which was formerly called "Hod-man-blinde."

Par. I will confess what I know without constraint: 125
if ye pinch me like a pasty, I can say no more.

First Sold. Bosko chimurcho.

Second Lord. Boblibindo chicurmurco.

First Sold. You are a merciful general. Our general bids you answer to what I shall ask you out of a 130 note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.

First Sold. First, demand of him how many horse the duke is strong. What say you to that?

Par. Five or six thousand; but very weak and un- 135 serviceable: the troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live.

First Sold. Shall I set down your answer so?

Par. Do: I'll take the sacrament on't, how and 140 which way you will.

Ber. All's one to him. What a past-saving slave is this!

First Lord. Y'are deceiv'd, my lord: this is Monsieur Parolles, the gallant militarist,—that was 145 his own phrase,—that had the whole theoric of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger.

142. All's . . . him. What] Capell; all's one to him. Bert. What Ff.

145. militarist] This must literally be taken to be a phrase of his own coining. It is a parallel to his expression "facerious" (II. iii. 31, above).

146. theoric] Cf. Othello, I. i. 24, and Henry V. I. i. 52. Hart in his note on the former passage says that it is one of the terms Ben Jonson ridicules, and it appears to have been introduced by Gabriel Harvey in his "Letters to Spenser," Theoricks and Practicks, about 1573. Reed cites for theoric and practice, Mendoza's Theorique and Practise of Warre, translated by Hoby, 1597.

148. chape] Schmidt defines it as "the metallic part at the end of the scabbard." New Eng. Dict., "The metal plate or mounting of a scabbard or sheath; particularly that which covers the point."

Second Lord. I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have 150 every thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly.

First Sold. Well, that's set down.

Par. Five or six thousand horse, I said,—I will say true,—or thereabouts, set down, for I'll speak truth.

First Lord. He's very near the truth in this. 155

Ber. But I con him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it.

Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say.

First Sold. Well, that's set down.

Par. I humbly thank you, sir. A truth's a truth; 160 the rogues are marvellous poor.

First Sold. Demand of him, of what strength they are a-foot. What say you to that?

Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spurio, a 165 hundred and fifty; Sebastian, so many; Corambus, so many; Jaques, so many; Guiltian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Gratii, two hundred fifty each; mine own company, Chitopher, Vaumond, Bentii, two hundred fifty each: so that the 170

149. Second Lord] Bertram (S. Walker conj.). 160, 161. A truth's . . . poor] given to First Lord by Dyce (ed. 2) (S. Walker conj.). 164. live] die Dyce (ed. 2) (S. Walker conj.), leave Staunton conj., live but this hour Hamner.

149.] In all probability S. Walker is right in conjecturing that this speech was meant for Bertram.

156. con him no thanks] "con" originally meant "know." Chaucer wrote, "Old wymen connen mochil thinge." It was used as in French, see Palsgrave (1530), 475-1, "I have conned hym good thanke: je luy ay sceu bon gré." Cf. also Wren, Serm.

bef. King, 30, "I will kon them small thanks." (See also New Eng. Dict.)

164. to live] S. Walker is positive that this should be "die": to his note he adds mira editorum ἀνασθησά! I still prefer Tollet's explanation that "fear may be supposed to occasion Parolles' mistake; as poor frightened Scrub cries: 'Spare all I have, and take my life.'" muster-file, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand poll; half of the which dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.

Ber. What shall be done to him? 175

First Lord. Nothing, but let him have thanks. Demand of him my condition, and what credit I have with the duke.

First Sold. Well, that's set down. You shall demand of him, whether one Captain Dumain be i' 180 the camp, a Frenchman; what his reputation is with the duke; what his valour, honesty, and expertness in wars; or whether he thinks it were not possible, with well-weighing sums of gold, to corrupt him to a revolt. What say you to this? 185 what do you know of it?

Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the inter'gatories: demand them singly.

First Sold. Do you know this Captain Dumain?

Par. I know him: a was a botcher's prentice in Paris, 190 from whence he was whipped for getting the shrieve's fool with child; a dumb innocent, that could not say him nay.

172. poll] Theobald, pole Fl.

174. lest] F 4; least F 1, 2, 3.

187. particular] particulars Capell.

188. inter'gatories] F 1, 2, 3; interrogatories F 4; interrogatory Capell.

193.] Johnson here adds Dumain lifts his hand in anger.

174. cassocks] military cloaks. Delius quotes Glapthorne's Hollander, "Here, Sir, receive this military cassock, it has seen service."

184. well-weighing] has double meaning—weight and influence.

188. inter'gatories] Cf. "And charge us there upon inter'gatories" (Merchant of Venice, v. i. 298).

192. shrieve's fool] The word "fool" here means a woman who is an idiot and in the charge of a sheriff. "The custody of all 'ideots,' etc., possessed of landed property, belonged to the king,

Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands; though I know his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls. 195

First Sold. Well, is this captain in the Duke of Florence's camp?

Par. Upon my knowledge he is, and lousy.

First Lord. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon. 200

First Sold. What is his reputation with the duke?

Par. The duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine, and writ to me this other day to turn him out o' the band: I think I have his letter in my pocket. 205

First Sold. Marry we'll search.

Par. In good sadness, I do not know: either it is there, or it is upon a file with the duke's other letters in my tent.

First Sold. Here 'tis; here's a paper; shall I read it to you? 210

Par. I do not know if it be it or no.

Ber. Our interpreter does it well.

200. lordship] Pope, Lord Ff. 204. o' the] a' th' F.

who was entitled to the income of their lands, but obliged to find them with necessaries. This prerogative, when there was a large estate in the case, was generally granted to some court favourite, or other person who made suit for and had interest enough to obtain it, which was called 'begging a fool.' But when the land was of inconsiderable value, the 'natural' was maintained, out of the profits, by the 'sheriff,' who accounted for them to the crown. As for those unhappy creatures who had neither possessions nor relations, they seem to have been considered as a species of property, being sold or given with as little ceremony, treated as capriciously and very often, it is to be feared, left to perish as miserably, as cats or dogs" (Ritson).

195. next tile] a trite metaphor for sudden death. It is used by Lucian, Plutarch, and many others, including, as Rolfe mentions, Whitney, whose Emblems (1586) Shakespeare may have read.

198. lousy] low-born, despicable.

207. In good sadness] in earnest, "joking apart." Cf. "I think my leg would shew in a silken hose . . . In sadness I think it would" (Every Man in his Humour, I. ii.).

First Lord. Excellently.

First Sold. Dian, the count's a fool, and full of gold— 215

Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir: that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Diana, to take heed of the allurements of one Count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy, but for all that very ruttish. I pray you, sir, put it up again. 220

First Sold. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favour.

Par. My meaning in't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid; for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy, who is a whale to virginity, and devours up all the 225 fry it finds.

Ber. Damnable both-sides rogue!

First Sold. When he swears oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it;

After he scores, he never pays the score:

Half won is match well made; match, and well make it:

He ne'er pays after-debts; take it before, 231

And say a soldier, Dian, told thee this,

Men are to mell with, boys are not to kiss;

215, 216.] Johnson supposes a line to be lost here. Steevens instead of "gold" conjectures "golden store" or "golden ore." Jackson reads "gold, I speak it," and lines 229-231 in this order: 230, 231, 229. Of course the fact that "gold" has nothing with which to rhyme may indicate that something is lost: but it seems just as likely that Shakespeare left it incomplete and began a fresh line 228. 230. well made] ill made Capell conj., half made Jackson conj.; match, and well] match well and Hamner, watch, and well Johnson conj., watch well and Rann; Johnson would read in this order: lines 230, 228, 229, 231; and well] an' we'll Steevens conj. 232, 233.] Capell would omit these lines as doubtful. 233. not to] but to Pope (Theobald).

220. ruttish] lustful (said of "Deere or Boares").

229. scores] takes (down a debt) hence incurs a debt. Cf. "Have you scored me?" (Othello, IV. i. 130).

230. Half won . . .] match made in business fashion is half won, so when you match, see that all is well arranged. Cf. King John, I. i. 174, "well won is still well shot . . ."

233. Men . . . kiss] The emphasis is probably on "men" and "boys," the words "mell" and "kiss" having much the same signification—that of

*For count of this, the count's a fool, I know it,
Who pays before, but not when he does owe it.* 235
Thine, as he vow'd to thee in thine ear,

PAROLLES.

Ber. He shall be whipped through the army with this rhyme in's forehead.

Second Lord. This is your devoted friend, sir; the 240 manifold linguist and the armipotent soldier.

Ber. I could endure any thing before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me.

First Sold. I perceive, sir, by our general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you. 245

Par. My life, sir, in any case! not that I am afraid to die; but that, my offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of nature. Let me live, sir, in a dungeon, i' the stocks, or anywhere, so I may live. 250

First Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely: therefore, once more to this Captain Dumain. You have answered to his reputation with the duke and to his valour: what is his honesty? 255

241. armipotent] Capell, army-potent Ff. 244. our] Capell; your F 1, 2;
the F 3, 4.

dallying. "Mell" was frequently used in the sense of "meddling." Spenser wrote, "It fathers fits not with such things to mell." Dyce adopts the emendation "but to kiss."

234. count of] Cf. "no man counts of her beauty" (Two Gentlemen of Verona, II. i. 65).

241. armipotent] sometimes used as an epithet of God. Cf. "The armipotent Mars" (Love's Labour's Lost, v. ii. 650).

242. a cat] Bertram repeats the obloquy several times; it is, as Clarke points out, characteristically indicative of his bad-tempered vexation. Bertram is throughout revealed to us as a coward more base, perhaps, than Parolles. He lacks the faculty of "knowing what he is" which Parolles possesses. Besides, noblesse oblige.

248. nature] the "three score years and ten."

Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister; for rapes and ravishments he parallels Nessus; he professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking 'em he is stronger than Hercules; he will lie, sir, with such volubility, that you would think truth 260 were a fool; drunkenness is his best virtue, for he will be swine-drunk, and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bed-clothes about him; but they know his conditions, and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his 265 honesty: he has every thing that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.

First Lord. I begin to love him for this.

Ber. For this description of thine honesty? A pox 270 upon him for me! he is more and more a cat.

First Sold. What say you to his expertness in war?

Par. Faith, sir, has led the drum before the English tragedians,—to belie him I will not,—and more of his soldiiership I know not; except, in that 275 country he had the honour to be the officer at a place there called Mile-end, to instruct for the

256. egg] Ag. (i.e. Agnes) Becket conj. 263, 264. bed-clothes . . . they] bed-clothes; but they about him Watkiss Lloyd conj. 273. has] ha's Ff.

256. egg . . . cloister] Used generally to be understood to mean that he would steal the most worthless thing from a holy place. It may refer to the old custom of blessing eggs ("Bless, O Lord, we beseech Thee, this Thy creature of eggs . . .") to which Falstaff referred when he said, "Thou hast not so much grace in thee, as to bless thee an egg." Someone suggested to Mr. Theselton that we should read "clyster"

(cleister). He understands that an egg is an ingredient in such preparations, and thinks that such "a masterpiece of nasty greed" would be quite in keeping with the Parolles's humour. It is a brilliant conjecture.

277. Mile-end] the proverbial drill ground. Cf. "Your devices in the war (are) not like those a man . . . sees at Mile End" (Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, IV. ii.).

doubling of files: I would do the man what honour
I can, but of this I am not certain.

First Lord. He hath out-villained villany so far that 280
the rarity redeems him.

Ber. A pox on him! he's a cat still.

First Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not to ask you if gold will corrupt him to revolt. 285

Par. Sir, for a cardecue he will sell the fee-simple of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.

First Sold. What's his brother, the other Captain 290 Dumain?

Second Lord. Why does he ask him of me?

First Sold. What's he?

Par. E'en a crow o' the same nest; not altogether so great^e as the first in goodness, but greater a great 295 deal in evil. He excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is.
In a retreat he outruns any lackey; marry, in coming on he has the cramp.

280. out-villained] out-villanied S. Walker conj. 286. cardecue] F 2, 3, 4; cardecue F 1. 289. for it] in it Hanmer.

280. out-villained villany] the obvious parallel is "out-herod Herod."

286. cardecue] eightpence.

286. fee-simple] "tenant in fee-simple . . . is he which hath lands or tenements to hold to him and to his heir for ever (Littleton); an estate in remainder is the residue of an estate, in land depending upon a particular estate and created together with the same. A particular estate is that which is derived from a general and greater estate (Wood)."—Rushton.

292. Why . . . me?] Johnson remarks that "every man is, on such occasions, more willing to hear his neighbours' character than his own."

298. lackey] a footman who "ran." The New Eng. Dict. gives an instance from The Times Whistle, iii. 106, "lackeys before her chariot run."

First Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to 300 betray the Florentine?

Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse, Count Rousillon.

First Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.

Par. [Aside.] I'll no more drumming; a plague of all 305 drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger. Yet who would have suspected an ambush where I was taken? 310

First Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die. The general says, you that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest 315 use; therefore you must die. Come, headsman, off with his head.

Par. O Lord, sir, let me live, or let me see my death!

First Sold. That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends. [Unmuffling him. 320
So, look about you: know you any here?

Ber. Good morrow, noble captain.

Second Lord. God bless you, Captain Parolles.

First Lord. God save you, noble captain.

Second Lord. Captain, what greeting will you to my 325
Lord Lafeu? I am for France.

First Lord. Good captain, will you give me a copy of the sonnet you writ to Diana in behalf of the 305. [Aside] Rowe (ed. 2), omitted Ff. 320. Unmuffling him] Steevens, omitted Ff. 328. the sonnet] F 1, 2; the same sonnet F 3, 4.

Count Rousillon? an I were not a very coward
I'd compel it of you; but fare you well. 330

[Exeunt Bertram and Lords.

First Sold. You are undone, captain; all but your scarf; that has a knot on 't yet.

Par. Who cannot be crushed with a plot?

First Sold. If you could find out a country where but women were that 'had received so much shame, 335 you might begin an impudent nation. Fare ye well, sir; I am for France too: we shall speak of you there. [Exit.

Par. Yet am I thankful: if my heart were great 'Twould burst at this. Captain I'll be no more; 340
But I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall: simply the thing I am
Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggart,
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass
That every braggart shall be found an ass. 345
Rust, sword! cool, blushes! and, Parolles, live
Safest in shame! being fool'd, by foolery thrive!
There's place and means for every man alive.
I'll after them. [Exit

329. an] Capell, and Ff.

345.] S. Walker says: "There is perhaps a line lost after 'found an ass.' Something seems to be wanting; live—thrive, too, is a suspicious rhyme for Shakespeare's age; triplets are very rare in him, and occur only, I think, under special circumstances. Perhaps, however, a rhyme is not wanted here."

348. There's place . . .] A line characteristic of Shakespeare's genius. He seems to have had sympathy with this miserable "thing" simply because it was a fellow-man.

SCENE IV.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.Enter HELENA, Widow, and DIANA.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you,
 One of the greatest in the Christian world
 Shall be my surety; 'fore whose throne 'tis needful,
 Ere I can perfect mine intents,³ to kneel.
 Time was, I did him a desired office, 5
 Dear almost as his life; which gratitude
 Through flinty Tartar's bosom would peep forth,
 And answer, thanks. I duly am inform'd
 His grace is at Marsellis; to which place
 We have convenient convoy. You must know, 10
 I am supposed dead: the army breaking,
 My husband hies him home; where, heaven aiding,
 And by the leave of my good lord the king,
 We'll be before our welcome.

Wid. Gentle madam, 4
 You never had a servant to whose trust 15
 Your business was more welcome.

Hel. Nor you, mistress,
 Ever a friend whose thoughts more truly labour
 To recompense your love. Doubt not but heaven
 Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower,
 As it hath fated her to be my motive 20

3. 'fore] for F 1. 9. Marsellis] F 2, 3; Marcellæ F 1; Marselis F 4. 16.
 you,] Rowe; you F 4; your F 1, 2, 3.

9. Marsellis] Marseilles, pronounced as a trisyllable.

10. convoy] means of conveyance. Cf.
 "As the winds give benefit and convoy is assistant, let me hear from you" (Hamlet, 1. iii. 3).

11. breaking] disbanding.

20. motive] whatever makes a thing

And helper to a husband. But, O strange men!

✓ That can such sweet use make of what they hate,
When saucy trusting of the cozen'd thoughts
Defiles the pitchy night: so lust doth play
With what it loathes for that which is away. 25
But more of this hereafter. You, Diana,
Under my poor instructions yet must suffer
Something in my behalf.

Dia. Let death and honesty
Go with your impositions, I am yours
Upon your will to suffer.

Hel. Yet, I pray you: 30
But with the word the time will bring on summer,
When briars shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp. We must away;
Our waggon is prepar'd, and time revives us:
All's well that ends well: still the fine's the crown; 35
Whate'er the course, the end is the renown.

[Exeunt.]

35. the fine's] Theobald; the fine F 1; that fines F 2, 3; that finds F 4.

move, the cause of motion. Cf. "The slavish motive of recanting fear" (=tongue) (Richard II. I. i. 193); also "all impediments in fancy's course are motives of more fancy" (v. iii. 214, below).

23. saucy trusting] wantonly giving the rein to or entertaining. Goneril (King Lear, I. iv. 350) says in answer to Albany's "you may fear, too far"—"Safer than trust too far. Let me still take away the harms I fear." Also, "as to remit Their saucy sweetness, that do coin heaven's image In stamps that are forbid" (Measure for Measure, II. iv. 45).

30. Yet] as in "yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown" (Jonah iii. 4).

31. with the word] obscure. Perhaps the drift of the meaning is "I must still pray you 'upon my will to suffer'; but it is with my word, my promise, that time will turn the bitter into sweet."

34. revives us] Cf. "that our God may lighten our eyes, and give us a little reviving in our bondage" (Ezra ix. 8).

35. the fine] "Finis coronat opus," as Boswell says. "La fin couronne les œuvres" (Henry VI. v. ii. 28). We still use the word in the phrase "in fine."

SCENE V.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.Enter COUNTESS, LAFEU, and Clown.

Laf. No, no, no; your son was misled with a snipt-taffeta fellow there, whose villanous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour: your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour, and your son 5 here at home, more advanced by the king than by that red-tailed humble-bee I speak of.

Count. I would I had not known him; it was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman that ever nature had praise for creating. If she had partaken of my 10 flesh, and cost me the dearest groans of a mother, I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

Laf. 'Twas a good lady, 'twas a good lady: we may pick a thousand salads ere we light on such another herb. 15

Clo. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet-marjoram of the salad, or rather the herb of grace.

Laf. They are not herbs, you knave; they are nose-herbs.

Clo. I am no great Nebuchadnezzar, sir; I have not 20 much skill in grass.

8. I had] he had Hanmer (Theobald conj.), Mason and Dyce. 14. salads] Reed, salleis Ff (as also line 17). 18. herbs] sallet-herbs Rowe, pot-herbes Collier MS. 21. grass] Rowe, grace Ff.

2. villanous saffron] There is some reference to the favourite yellow dye used for various purposes. "because holy water was sprinkled with it" (Johnson).

18, 19. nose-herbs] scented flowers (cf. nosegay).

11. dearest] direct, as frequently.

17. herb of grace] rue, so called

Laf. Whether dost thou profess thyself, a knave or a fool?

Clo. A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a knave at a man's. 25

Laf. Your distinction?

Clo. I would cozen the man of his wife, and do his service.

Laf. So you were a knave at his service, indeed.

Clo. And I would give his wife my bauble, sir, to do her service. 30

Laf. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both knave and fool.

Clo. At your service.

Laf. No, no, no. 35

Clo. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

Laf. Who's that? a Frenchman?

Clo. Faith, sir, a' has an English name; but his fisnomy is more hotter in France than there. 40

Laf. What prince is that?

Clo. The black prince, sir; alias, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil.

Laf. Hold thee, there's my purse. I give thee not

39. name] Rowe; maine F 1, 2; main F 3; mean F 4; mien Anon. conj.
40. hotter] honour'd Hanmer (Warburton).

30. bauble] the stick of a court fool; the word was frequently used equivocally. (See Romeo and Juliet, II. iv. 97.)

39. an English name] namely, the Black Prince. The "authentic" versions read "maine." Some editors have taken this to refer to the hairiness of "Old Harry"; but they do not explain why the hair should be English.

40. more hotter] Warburton's emendation "honour'd" for "hotter" has been adopted by many editors; but there is little reason to suppose that Shakespeare did not write "more hotter."

this to suggest thee from thy master thou talkest 45 of: serve him still.

Clo. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire; and the master I speak of ever keeps a good fire. But, sure, he is the prince of the world; let his nobility remain in's court. I am 50 for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter: some that humble themselves may; but the many will be too chill and tender, and they'll be for the flowery way that leads to the broad gate and the great fire. 55

Laf. Go thy ways, I begin to be aweary of thee; and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy ways: let my horses be well looked to, without any tricks.

Clo. If I put any tricks upon 'em, sir, they shall be 60 jades' tricks, which are their own right by the law of nature. " [Exit

Laf. A shrewd knave and an unhappy.

45. suggest] seduce Rowe (ed. 2).

49. sure] since Hanmer, for Capell.

45. suggest thee] tempt thee to leave.

54. too chill] too hesitating, too lukewarm.

54, 55. flowery way] Steevens aptly quotes "the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire" (Macb. II. iii. 21).

59. tricks] a reference to the greasing of horses' teeth to prevent their eating the forage the ostler thought well to appropriate.

63. shrewd] mischievous. "A shrewd unhappy gallows" (Love's Labour's Lost, v. ii. 12). "unhappy" = unlucky. Mr. Craig quotes from Holland's Pliny (Nat. Hist., Bk. XIX, chap. vi. pt. ii. p. 22, K. ed., 1634):

"There is a kind of garlicke growing wilde in the fieldes . . . which being boiled that it should not grow, they commonly throw forth in cornfields for the shrewd, unhappy foules which lie upon the land and eat up the seed new sown; for presently as any of these birds taste thereof they will be drunk." In this instance "unhappy" is more likely to mean "mischievous" than "unlucky." Cf. Much Ado, II. i. 361, "She hath often dream'd of unhappiness, and waked herself with laughing." The construction "and an unhappy" is not unusual. Delius quotes a parallel from Paynter, "A fair maid and a comely."

Count. So he is. My lord that's gone made himself much sport out of him: by his authority he re- 65 mains here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauciness; and, indeed, he has no pace, but runs where he will.

Laf. I like him well; 'tis not amiss. And I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good lady's death, 70 and that my lord your son was upon his return home, I moved the king my master to speak in the behalf of my daughter; which, in the minority of them both, his majesty, out of a self-gracious remembrance, did first propose. His highness 75 hath promised me to do it; and to stop up the displeasure he hath conceived against your son, there is no fitter matter. How does your lady-ship like it?

Count. With very much content, my lord; and I wish 80 it happily effected.

Laf. His highness comes post from Marsellis, of as able body as when he numbered thirty: a will be here to-morrow, or I am deceived by him that in such intelligence hath seldom failed. 85

Count. It rejoices me, that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters that my son will be here to-

67. pace] place Hanmer, pause W. J. Craig conj. 75. propose] purpose S.
Walker conj. 82. Marsellis] F 2; Marcellus F 1; Marselles F 3, 4. 86.
It] Ir F 1, I F 2.

67. pace] Schmidt understands this to mean "he observes no rule, pays no regard to form." The metaphor is probably taken from horse-breaking and training — the clown has no restraint laid on him.

74. self-gracious] voluntary, proceeding from his own kindness. Cf. "Infusing him with self and vain conceit" (Richard II. III. ii. 166). Also, "Who by self and violent hands took off her life" (Macbeth, v. viii. 70).

night: I shall beseech your lordship to remain with me till they meet together.

Laf. Madam, I was thinking with what manners I might safely be admitted. 90

Count. You need but plead your honourable privilege.

Laf. Lady, of that I have made a bold charter; but I thank my God it holds yet.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam! yonder's my lord your son with a patch of velvet on's face: whether there be a scar under 't or no, the velvet knows; but 'tis a goodly patch of velvet. His left cheek is a cheek of two pile and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare. 95 100

Laf. A scar nobly got, or a noble scar, is a good livery of honour; so belike is that.

Clo. But it is your carbonadoed face.

Laf. Let us go see your son, I pray you: I long to talk with the young noble soldier. 105

Clo. Faith, there's a dozen of 'em, with delicate fine hats and most courteous feathers, which bow the head and nod at every man. [Exeunt.]

103. carbonadoed] Theobald, carbinado'd Ff.

98.] Cf. Measure for Measure, I. ii., " . . . And thou the velvet; thou art good velvet; thou 'rt a three piled piece, I warrant thee: I had as lief be a list of an English kersey as be piled, as thou art piled for a French velvet."

101.] Malone says that it is more likely that the countess should have spoken thus favourably of Bertram than Lafeu. But Lafeu was hoping to become his father-in-law.

103. carbonadoed face] "A carbonado is a piece of meat cut so as to be cooked on a gridiron. The word is still used in France" (Schmidt). Cf. King Lear, II. ii. 41, "I'll carbonado your shanks for you." In his note of this passage, Mr. Craig quotes Cotgrave: "Carbonade, a carbonadoe, a rasher on the coals; also a flash over the face which fetcheth the flesh with it."

ACT V

SCENE I.—Marseilles. A Street.

Enter HELENA, WIDOW, and DIANA, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting day and night,
 Must wear your spirits low; we cannot help it:
 But since you have made the days and nights as one,
 To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
 Be bold you do so grow in my requital 5
 As nothing can unroot you. In happy time;

Enter a gentle Astringer.

This man may help me to his majesty's ear,
 If he would spend his power. God save you, sir.

Gent. And you.

Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France. 10

Gent. I have been sometimes there.

Hel. I do presume, sir, that you are not fallen
 From the report that goes upon your goodness;
 And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions,

Marseilles. A Street.] Capell, The Court of France. Pope. 6. Enter a gentle Astringer] F 1; Enter a gentle Astranger F 2; Enter a gentleman a stranger F 3, 4.

5. Be bold] be sure. Cf. "I would I were so sure To win the king as I am bold her honour Will remain hers" (Cymbeline, 1st. iv. 2).

6. Enter a gentle Astringer] "An ostringer or astringer is a falconer, and such a character is probably to be met with about a court which was famous for the love of that diversion . . .

A 'gentle astringer' is a 'gentleman falconer.' . . . Cowell in his Law Dict. says, 'We usually call a falconer, who keeps that kind of hawk, an austringer'" (Steevens). The word "astringer" may have been added to the MS. by the manager of the theatre merely to indicate the costume.

Which lay nice manners by, I put you to 15
 The use of your own virtues, for the which I shall continue thankful.

Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will please you
 To give this poor petition to the king,
 And aid me with that store of power you have 20
 To come into his presence.

Gent. The king's not here.

Hel. Not here, sir!

Gent. Not, indeed :
 He hence remov'd last night, and with more haste
 Than is his use.

Wid. Lord, how we lose our pains!

Hel. All's well that ends well yet, 25
 Though time seem so adverse and means unfit.
 I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

Gent. Marry, as I take it, to Rousillon ;
 Whither I am going.

Hel. I do beseech you, sir,
 Since you are like to see the king before me, 30
 Commend the paper to his gracious hand ;
 Which I presume shall render you no blame
 But rather make you thank your pains for it.
 I will come after you with what good speed
 ✓ Our means will make us means.

Gent. This I'll do for you 35

Hel. And you shall find yourself to be well thank'd,

16. virtues] virtue S. Walker conj. 35. make us means.] make us. Anon.
 conj. 36-38.] Prose in Ff ; verse first by Pope.

23. remov'd] the word was used as a rule for the movements of monarchs.

Whate'er falls more. We must to horse again :
Go, go, provide. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rousillon. The inner Court of the Countess's Palace.

Enter Clown and PAROLLES.

Par. Good Mr. Lavache, give my Lord Lafeu this letter.
I have ere now, sir, been better known to you,
when I have held familiarity with fresher clothes ;
but I am now, sir, muddled in fortune's mood, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure. 5

Clo. Truly, fortune's displeasure is but sluttish if it smell so strongly as thou speakest of: I will henceforth eat no fish of fortune's buttering.
Prithee, allow the wind.

Par. Nay, you need not to stop your nose, sir: I 10 spake but by a metaphor.

4. mood] moat Theobald. "Theobald altered 'mood' to 'moat'; but a quibble between 'mood' and 'mud' is intended here,—the words having been formerly pronounced nearly alike" (Dyce). 11. spake] F 1; speake F 2; speak F 3, 4.

37. falls] befalls. Cf. v. iii. 121, below.

Scene 11.

1. Lavache] If Parolles's name is taken from the French, it is just as probable that "Lavatch," which we have in the Ff, is the English spelling of La Vache. Clarke derives it from "lavage." Tollet thinks Shakespeare may have made some punning allusion to the name of the actor who played the part, namely, either Richard Cowley or John Lowine.

4. mood] This is the Ff reading, and no comment would have been required had not Theobald hit upon the idea of changing it to "moat," for which many reasons can be urged. Steevens goes so far as to call it "one of the luckiest ever produced." Be that as it may, it is surely best policy to retain the reading of the only "authentic" version we possess. Shakespeare often uses the word mood to imply displeasure, so that there is little reason for supposing that he did not write "muddled in fortune's mood" if he wrote "I smell of her strong displeasure." The two sentences are parallel. See, however, unclean fish-pond, ll. 20, 21 post.

Clo. Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink, I will stop my nose; or against any man's metaphor. Prithee, get thee further.

Par. Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper. 15

Clo. Foh! prithee, stand away: a paper from fortune's close-stool to give to a nobleman! Look, here he comes himself.

Enter LAFEU.

Here is a pur of fortune's, sir, or of fortune's cat, but not a musk-cat, that has fallen into the un- 20 clean fishpond of her displeasure, and, as he says, is muddied withal. Pray you, sir, use the carp as you may, for he looks like a poor, decayed, ingenious, foolish, rascally knave. I do pity his distress in my similes of comfort, and leave him 25 to your lordship. [Exit.]

Par. My lord, I am a man whom fortune hath cruelly scratched.

Laf. And what would you have me to do? 'Tis too

19. pur] F 4; purre F 1, 2, 3; puss Mason conj.; or of fortune's cat] or fortune's cat Warburton. 20. musk-cat] Theobald, muscat Ff, mouse-cat Anon. conj. 25. similes] Theobald (Warburton), smiles Ff. 26. Exit] Capell, omitted Ff.

24. ingenious] probably "not ingenious." Ingenious is used by Shakespeare to mean intellectually gifted, as in "bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable" (Richard III. iii. i. 155). The word here seems to be used as if there were an adjective "genious" with a negative prefix "in." Cf. "ingag'd," v. iii. 96, below. The New Eng. Dict. quotes, 1621, Brathwait, Nat. Emb. Beggaria (1877), 43, "Sprong of ingenerous bloud"; the word "ingenious," as used in this instance, may be a corruption of "ingenerous."

25. similes] Steevens quotes an entry on the books of the Stationers' Company (1595): "A booke of verie pythie similies, comfortable and profitable for all men to read." He adds that the misprint "smiles" for "similies" occurs in the old copies of 1 Henry IV. i. ii. 89, where instead of "unsavoury similies" we read "unsavoury smiles."

late to pare her nails now. Wherein have you 30 played the knave with fortune that she should scratch you, who of herself is a good lady, and would not have knaves thrive long under her?
 There's a cardcue for you. Let the justices make you and fortune friends; I am for other 35 business.

Par. I beseech your honour to hear me one single word.

Laf. You beg a single penny more: come, you shall ha't; save your word. 40

Par. My name, my good lord, is Parolles.

Laf. You beg more than one word then. Cox my passion! give me your hand. How does your drum?

Par. O my good lord! you were the first that found me. 45

Laf. Was I, in sooth? and I was the first that lost
 thee. *

Par. It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some grace, for you did bring me out.

Laf. Out upon thee, knave! dost thou put upon me 50 at once both the office of God and the devil?
 One brings thee in grace and the other brings thee out.
 [Trumpets sound.]

33. under her?] F 2, 3, 4; under? F 1. 42. one word] F 3, 4; word
 F 1, 2; a word Collier (Egerton MS.). 51. devil?] Pope, diuel: F 1.
 53. Trumpets sound] Theobald, omitted Ff.

34. the justices] "The reference is to the Poor Law, by which Justices of the Peace had to grant a pauper's maintenance" (H. T.).

42. word] Evidently a play on the name Parolles. Malone thinks that one was unnecessarily added by the editor of F 3, a quibble being intended on the word Parolles. Cf., however, what Parolles says in line 37, "hear me one single word" (Dr. Proescholdt).

42, 43. Cox my passion] God's (my) passion; probably a corruption of "God's passion." Cf. "Cock's passion, silence!" (Taming of the Shrew, IV. i. 121).

The king's coming; I know by his trumpets.
 Sirrah, inquire further after me; I had talk of 55 you last night: though you are a fool and a knave, you shall eat: go to, follow.

Par. I praise God for you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Flourish. Enter KING, COUNTESS, LAFEU, Lords, Gentlemen, Guards, etc.

King. We lost a jewel of her, and our esteem
 Was made much poorer by it: but your son,
 As mad in folly, lack'd the sense to know
 Her estimation home,

Count. 'Tis past, my liege;
 And I beseech your majesty to make it 5
 Natural rebellion, done i' the blaze of youth;
 When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force,
 O'erbears it and burns on.

6. blaze] Warburton (Theobald conj.), blade Ff, blood Perring conj.

1. esteem] In Troilus and Cressida Shakespeare uses the phrase "most dear in the esteem and poor in worth," which illustrates exactly the meaning of "esteem," namely, the supposed worth as opposed to the real worth. So "esteem" may mean self-esteem or else the value at which others esteem us; it therefore means here either "we are less rich in self-esteem," or "we are less rich in things that we esteem" since she is gone. Cf. inscription on Molière's bust: "Rien ne manquait à sa gloire, il manquait à la nôtre."

3. As] as if.

4. home] to know home is to know very completely. Cf. "I cannot speak him home" (Coriolanus, II. ii. 107); "tax him home" (Hamlet, III. iii. 29).

6. blaze] The Ff read "blade." The word blade is nowhere else used by Shakespeare in such a context (though in a similar metaphor sometimes); nor does it seem in any way an appropriate word to precede such a simile as "when oil and fire o'erbears reason and burns on."

King. My honour'd lady,
 I have forgiven and forgotten all,
 Though my revenges were high bent upon him, 10
 And watch'd the time to shoot.

Laf. This I must say,—
 But first I beg my pardon,—the young lord
 Did to his majesty, his mother, and his lady,
 Offence of mighty note, but to himself
 The greatest wrong of all: he lost a wife 15
 Whose beauty did astonish the survey
 Of richest eyes, whose words all ears took captive,
 Whose dear perfection hearts that scorn'd to serve
 Humbly call'd mistress.

King. Praising what is lost Makes the remembrance dear. Well, call him hither; 20
 We are reconcil'd, and the first view shall kill
 All répétition. Let him not ask our pardon:
 The nature of his great offence is dead,
 And deeper than oblivion we do bury
 The incensing relics of it: let him approach, 25
 A stranger, no offender; and inform him
 So 'tis our will he should.

Gent. I shall, my liege. [Exit.]

King. What says he to your daughter? have you spoke?

Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

24. we do] do we Reed. 28. What . . . spoke?] Two lines in Ff, ending "daughter," . . . "spoke?"

10. high bent] a metaphor from archery. 29. reference] Cf. "Many things having reference to one consent. may

17. richest eyes] "to have seen work contrariously" (Henry V. i. ii.
 much : . . is to have rich eyes" (As You Like It, iv. i. 24). 205).

King. Then shall we have a match. I've letters sent me

30

That sets him high in fame.

Enter BERTRAM.

Laf. He looks well on 't.

King. I'm not a day of season,
For thou mayst see a sunshine and a hail
In me at once; but to the brightest beams
Distracted clouds give way: so stand thou forth; 35
The time is fair again.

Ber. My high-repented blames,
Dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. All is whole;
Not one word more of the consumed time.
✓ Let's take the instant by the forward top,
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees 40
The inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals ere we can effect them. You remember
The daughter of this lord?

Ber. Admiringly, my liege. At first
I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart 45
Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue,
Where the impression of mine eye infixing,

30, 31.] Prose in Ff; verse first by Pope. 32. season] summer Clark MS., seasonable weather Keightley conj. 44. Admiringly, my liege.] Rowe; Admiringly my liege, F 1, 2; Admiringly, my liege, F 3, 4. 46.] After this line Keightley thinks that a line may be lost, conveying the meaning, "Another object met my wandering fancy."

30. letters] singular. Cf. iv. v. 87, above.

32. not . . . season] I am a day out of season.

45. stuck . . . upon] "Stick" was used by Shakespeare not only in the sense which we understand now ("a saw a flea stuck upon Bardolph's nose"), but also in a more dignified sense. "Honour stuck upon him as the sun in the grey vault of heaven" (§ Henry IV. II. iii. 18).

Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me,
 Which warp'd the line of every other favour ;
 Scorn'd a fair colour, or express'd it stolen ; 50
 Extended or contracted all proportions
 To a most hideous object : thence it came
 That she, whom all men prais'd, and whom myself,
 Since I have lost, have lov'd, was in mine eye
 The dust that did offend it.

King. Well excus'd : 55
 That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away
 From the great compt. But love, that comes too late,
 Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
 To the great sender turns a sour offence,
 ✓ Crying, "That's good that's gone." Our rash faults
 Make trivial price of serious things we have, 61
 Not knowing them until we know their grave :
 Oft our displeasures, to ourselves unjust,
 Destroy our friends and after weep their dust :
 Our own love waking cries to see what's done, 65
 While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon.

49. warp'd] warpt F 1, 2 ; wrapt F 3, 4. 50. Scorn'd] Scorch'd Hanmer (Warburton), Scors'd Becket conj. 58, 59. carried, . . . sender] Theobald, carried . . . sender, Ff. 61. trivial] F 1, 2 ; triall F 3 ; trial F 4. 65, 66.] Johnson considered these two lines spurious. 66. shameful hate] shame full late Globe edition (W. G. C., Fraser Mag. conj.).

48. perspective] The old word for telescope is here used to mean a special kind of glass. "Perspectives, which rightly gazed upon, show nothing but confusion, eyed awry distinguish form" (Richard II. II. ii. 18). Cf. also, 1615, John Stephens, Satyrical Essays, character xvii. p. 301, "My mistresse is my perspective glasse, through which I view the world's vanity" (Trans. New Shak. Soc.).

57. compt] reckoning, as in "When we shall meet at compt" (Othello, v. II. 273), where it means the final reckoning.

60. rash faults] Lettsom would read "rasher faults."

66.] This line is by many editors supposed to be corrupt. Sleep out the afternoon probably means to sleep all the afternoon, having completed one's work in the morning. Hate has done its best and now sleeps at ease. Cf. "Thou hast not youth nor age ; But,

Be this sweet Helen's knell, and now forget her.

Send forth your amorous token for fair Maudlin :

The main consents are had ; and here we'll stay

To see our widower's second marriage-day. 70

Count. Which better than the first, O dear heaven, bless !

Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cesse !

Laf. Come on, my son, in whom my house's name

Must be digested, give a favour from you

To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter, 75

That she may quickly come.

[Bertram gives a ring.

By my old beard,

And every hair that's on't, Helen, that's dead,

Was a sweet creature ; such a ring as this,

The last that e'er I took her leave at court,

I saw upon her finger.

71. Count] Theobald, continued to king in Ff. 72. meet,] Rowe ; no comma in Ff. 79. that e'er I] that ere I Ff.

as it were, an after-dinner's sleep, Dreaming on both . . ." (Measure for Measure, III. i. 32).

68. Maudlin] Magdalen. It may be only a coincidence that the heroine of this play has Shakespeare's favourite name (if we may judge by the frequent use), whereas her substitute is given a name apparently distasteful to him, for we only come across it once again, in the Comedy of Errors, as a servant's name.

71, 72. Which . . . cesse !] The Ff give this speech to the king. The mistake is palpable.

72. cesse] old spelling, retained for the sake of the rhyme.

73. son] son-in-law.

74. digested] amalgamated. Cf. "With my two daughters' dowers digest this third" (King Lear, I. i. 130).

79. The last] the last time (see Abbott, § 48) ; "her" seems to be used for "of her," "at her hands," i.e. I bade her farewell (Abbott, § 220) [Prof. Proescholdt]. Lettsom observes, "The last that" cannot possibly mean "the last time that" : if it means anything, he says, it must mean "the last ring that." "Nor is it English to say 'take a person's leave' for 'take leave of a person.'" He would therefore read "The last eve, ere she took her leave at court." It seems rather beside the mark to discuss the "English." Shakespeare used the language very much as he pleased, as poor Johnson so often discovered. Taking "the last" to mean "the last time" makes the passage quite clear, and I think that suffices.

Ber. Hers it was not. 80

King. Now, pray you, let me see it; for mine eye,
While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to't.
This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen,
I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood
Necessitied to help, that by this token 85
I would relieve her. Had you that craft to reave
her
Of what should stead her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign,
Howe'er it pleases you to take it so,
The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life,
I've seen her wear it; and she reckon'd it 90
At her life's rate.

Laf. I'm surè I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceiv'd, my lord, she never saw it:
In Florence was it from a casement thrown me,
Wrapp'd in a paper, which contain'd the name
Of her that threw it. Noble she was, and thought 95
I stood ingag'd: but when I had subscrib'd
To mine own fortune, and inform'd her fully
I could not answer in that course of honour

90. I've] Pope, I have Ff. 91. life's] Rowe, lives Ff; I'm] Pope, I am Ff.
96. ingag'd] engaged Rowe.

83.] Elze compares the supposed gift of a ring by Elizabeth to Essex, when the latter sailed for Cadiz, 1596 (cf. Henry VIII.). "In Samuel Rowley's When you see me, you know me, there is a similar giving of a ring" (Huntet).

84. I bade her] an elliptical construction. To make it quite clear, understand "I bade her . . . (remember) that by this token . . ."

85. Necessitied] in need of help.

96. ingag'd] not gaged (not ingaged). Cf. inhabitable = uninhabitable. Also Merchant of Venice, I. i. 130, where the positive "gaged" is used.

96. subscrib'd] given an account of.

As she had made the overture, she ceas'd
 In heavy satisfaction, and would never 100
 Receive the ring again.

King. Plutus himself,
 That knows the tinct and multiplying medicine,
 Hath not in nature's mystery more science
 Than I have in this ring: 'twas mine, 'twas Helen's Whoever gave it you. Then, if you know 105
 That you are well acquainted with yourself,
 Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
 You got it from her. She call'd the saints to surety,
 That she would never put it from her finger,
 Unless she gave it to yourself in bed, 110
 Where you have never come, or sent it us
 Upon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it.

King. Thou speak'st it falsely, as I love mine honour;
 And mak'st conjectural fears to come into me,
 Which I would fain shut out. If it should prove 115
 That thou art so inhuman,—'twill not prove so;
 And yet I know not: thou didst hate her deadly,

101. Plutus] Rowe, Plutus Ff. falsely: as . . . honour, Ff.

113. falsely, as . . . honour;] Rowe,

100. heavy satisfaction] "sadly acquiescing in what she acknowledged to be necessary" (Schmidt).

101. Plutus] "The grand alchemist, who knows the tincture which confers the properties of gold upon base metals, and the matter by which gold is multiplied, by which a small quantity of gold is made to communicate its qualities to a large mass of base metal." In the reign of Henry IV. a law was made to forbid all men thenceforth to multiply gold, or use any craft of multiplication. Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, I. v. 37, "that great medicine hath With his tinct gilded thee." The grand elixir of the alchemists is here referred to.

106. That . . . yourself] The use of "if you know" is similar to that in Macbeth, III. iv. 74, "If I stand here, I saw him." The meaning in this passage is: "As sure as you know that you are well acquainted with yourself."

And she is dead ; which nothing, but to close
 Her eyes myself, could win me to believe,
 More than to see this ring. Take him away. 120

[Guards seize Bertram.]

My fore-past proofs, howe'er the matter fall,
 Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
 Having vainly fear'd too little. Away with him !
 We'll sift this matter further.

Ber. If you shall prove
 This ring was ever hers, you shall as easy 125
 Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
 Where yet she never was. [Exit, guarded.]

King. I am wrapp'd in dismal thinkings.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. Gracious sovereign,
 Whether I have been to blame or no, I know not :
 Here's a petition from a Florentine, 130
 Who hath for four or five removes come short
 To tender it herself. I undertook it,
 Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
 Of the poor suppliant, who by this I know
 Is here attending : her business looks in her 135
 With an importing visage, and she told me,

122. tax] F 3, 4 ; taxe F 2 ; taxe F 1. 127. Exit, guarded] Rowe, omitted Ff. 128. Enter a Gentleman] before "I am . . . thinkings" Ff.

123. Having vainly] "The proofs I have already known all the time are so evident that, whatever the ultimate result, my fears will have proved to have been too wavering, too feeble."

131. removes] day's journeys. A frequent word to describe the journeys of parties, such as a king and his retinue. 131. come short] failed to overtake.

In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
Your highness with herself.

King. Upon his many protestations to marry me when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. 140
*Now is the Count Rousillon a widower: his vows are forfeited to me, and my honour's paid to him.
He stole from Florence, taking, no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice. Grant it me, O king! in you it best lies; otherwise a seducer* 145 flourishes, and a poor maid is undone.

DIANA CAPILET.

Laf. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for this: I'll none of him.

King. The heavens have thought well on thee, Lafeu, 150
To bring forth this discovery. Seek these suitors:
Go speedily and bring again the count. .

[Exeunt Gentleman and some Attendants.]

I am afeard the life of Helen, lady,
Was foully snatch'd.

Count. Now, justice on the doers!

142. honour's] Rowe; honors F 1, 2, 3; honours, F 4. 144. his country] F 1, 2; this country F 3, 4. 148. farr] F 1; fear F 3, 4; feare F 2; and toll] a toule Becket conj. 148, 149. toll for this I'll] toule for this. Ile F 1; toule him for this. Ile F 2, 3, 4. 152. Exeunt . . .] Malone, omitted Ff.

137. sweet . . . brief] To Rolfe this phrase seems exactly to describe itself and many others like it in the poet's language—condensed “sweetness and light”—“infinite riches in a little room.”

148, 149. toll for this] “pay a tax for the liberty of selling” this=Bertram. The toll-book was ordered by law “to prevent the sale of such (horses) as were stolen and to preserve the property to the right owner.” Lafeu means “I will put Bertram up for sale; I prefer to have any other.” Some editors take it to mean I will toll the bell for this Bertram, get rid of him. The toll-book in which horses sold at fairs were entered is alluded to in The Revenger's Tragedy (apud Dodsley, l.c. x. 44). See also The play of Stuckley (apud Simpson, The School of Shakespeare, vol. ii. p. 210).

Re-enter BERTRAM, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, sith wives are monsters to you, 155
And that you fly them as you swear them lordship,
Yet you desire to marry.

Re-enter Gentleman, with Widow and DIANA.

What woman's that?

Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine,
Derived from the ancient Capilet:
My suit, as I do understand, you know, 160
And therefore know how far I may be pitied.

Wid. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honour
Both suffer under this complaint we bring,
And both shall cease, without your remedy.

King. Come hither, county; do you know these women?

Ber. My lord, I neither can nor will deny 166
But that I know them: do they charge me further?

Dia. Why do you look so strange upon your wife?

Ber. She's none of mine, my lord.

Dia. If you shall marry,
You give away this hand, and that is mine; 170
You give away heaven's vows, and those are mine;
You give away myself, which is known mine;

154. Re-enter . . .] after line 153 in the Ff. 155. sir, sith wives are monsters] Dyce; Sir, sir, wives are monsters F 1; Sir, wives are such monsters F 2; Sir, wives are so monstrous F 3, 4. 157. Re-enter . . .] Malone; Enter Widdow, Diana, and Parolles Ff. 165. hither] F 2, 3, 4; hether F 1; county;] Dyce (ed. 2) (S. Walker conj.), count; Ff.

155. sith wives] The Folio reads, "Sir, sir wives," which, if not absolute nonsense (it has been taken to express the king's impatience), is a very unusual phrase. Dyce's emendation sith (since) seems so plausible as to be almost a certainty.
164. cease] perish (as above). Both my age and honour will come to an end unless I have your remedy.

For I by vow am so embodied yours,
 That she which marries you must marry me;
 Either both or none. 175

Laf. Your reputation comes too short for my daughter:
 you are no husband for her.

Ber. My lord, this is a fond and desperate creature,
 Whom sometime I have laugh'd with: let your highness
 Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour 180
 Than for to think that I would sink it here.

King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend
 Till your deeds gain them: fairer prove your honour
 Than in my thought it lies.

Dia. Good my lord,
 Ask him upon his oath, if he does think 185
 He had not my virginity.

King. What say'st thou to her?

Ber. She's impudent, my lord;
 And was a common gamester to the camp.

Dia. He does me wrong, my lord; if I were so,
 He might have bought me at a common price: 190
 Do not believe him. O! behold this ring,
 Whose high respect and rich validity
 Did lack a parallel; yet for all that
 He gave it to a commoner o' the camp,
 If I be one.

Count. He blushes, and 'tis hit: 195

183. gain them: fairer] Hanmer (Theobald conj.), gain them fairer: Ff.
 195. 'tis hit] 'tis it Capell, 'tis his Pope, is hit Malone conj., 'tis fit Henley conj.

192. validity] worth. Cf. "more validity . . . lives in carrion flies than Romeo" (Romeo and Juliet, III. iii.
 33).

195. 'tis hit] 'tis found out. Cf.
 "Thou hast hit it" (Taming of the Shrew, II. 199). In most editions the emendation "'tis it" has been adopted.

Of six preceding ancestors, that gem
 Conferr'd by testament to th' sequent issue,
 Hath it been owed and worn. This is his wife:
 That ring's a thousand proofs.

King. . . . Methought you said
 You saw one here in court could witness it. 200

Dia. I did, my lord, but loath am to produce
 So bad an instrument: his name's Parolles.

Laf. I saw the man to-day, if man he be.

King. Find him, and bring him hither.

Ber. . . . What of him?

He's quoted for a most perfidious slave, 205
 With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debosh'd
 Whose nature sickens but to speak a truth.
 Am I or that or this for what he'll utter,
 That will speak any thing? *

King. . . . She hath that ring of yours.

Ber. I think she has: certain it is I lik'd her, 210
 And boarded her i' the wanton way of youth.
 She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
 Madding my eagerness with her restraint,

* 197. to th'] F 3, 4; to 'th F 1, 2.
 nature sickens: but . . . truth, Ff.

207. Whose . . . truth] Hanmer, Whose
 211. boarded] Rowe, boarded Ff.

197. sequent issue] a legal term: the next heir to whom personal property is bequeathed.

202. instrument] a thing or person useful as a means to an end.

205. quoted] cited. Cf. "A fellow by the hand of nature marked, quoted and signed to do a deed of shame" (King John, IV. ii. 222).

206. debosh'd] See above, II. iii. 140.

208. Am I or . . .] Do I care?—Can the evidence of such a rascal decide my character? (Case).

211. boarded] See Cotgrave: "aborder = to approach, accost, aboard . . . come or draw near unto." Cf. "Whom, thus at gaze, the palmer 'gan to board With goodly reason, and thus fair bespake" (Spenser). Also Hamlet, II. ii. 170, "Away, I do beseech you both, away; I'll board him presently."

213. Madding] the only verb in Shakespeare meaning "to make mad."

As all impediments in fancy's course
 Are motives of more fancy; and, in fine, 215
 Her infinite cunning, with her modern grace,
 Subdued me to her rate: she got the ring,
 And I had that which any inferior might
 At market-price have bought.

Dia.

I must be patient;

You, that have turn'd off a first so noble wife, 220
 May justly diet me. I pray you yet,

216. infinite cunning] Singer (S. Walker conj. and Collier MS.); insuite coming F 1; insuit coming F 2, 3; insuit coming F 4. 218. any] an or my S. Walker conj. 221. diet] dye Ff, dye to conj.

215. fancy] love; frequently used in this sense. Cf. "a martial man to be soft fancy's slave" (Lucrece, 200).

216. modern grace] Editors have found it difficult to explain this expression. Williams asks, "What are we to understand by 'modern grace'?" Johnson tells us explicitly that, in Shakespeare, 'modern' has the signification of 'vulgar,' 'mean,' 'common.' Malone understands it to mean 'common,' 'ordinary'; Walker 'trivial,' 'everyday.' That such was its early meaning we may learn from this play, II. iii. 2, where we hear of 'philosophical persons, to make modern and familiar, things supernatural and causeless.' Could such an epithet be, under any circumstances, applicable to grace (it would be preposterous, in this case, to suppose an oxymoron), and, if it could, would 'modern grace' convey the evident purport of Bertram's explanation of his conduct? Assuredly not. Could Bertram wish it to be believed that he had been betrayed by a woman of but commonplace attractions? . . ." Bertram is evidently trying to excuse his conduct; probably he meant very much what Beaumont and Fletcher implied when they wrote, "Can red and white An eye, a nose, a cheek— . . . with a little turn That wanton fools call fashion thus abuse me?" (Bonduca, II. ii.).

217. rate] condition, i.e. the gift of the ring.

218. any] Walker supposes this to be a misprint; as in Love's Labour's Lost, I. i. 104, where "Why should I joy in any abortive birth?" is printed by mistake for "an abortive birth."

221. diet] undoubtedly corrupt, but nothing to replace it. Malone interprets it "may justly loath or be weary of me, as people generally are of a regimen or prescribed and scanty diet." Collins and Steevens think she means "may justly make me fast, by depriving me (as Desdemona says) of the rites for which I love you." Steevens adds that the allusion may be to the management of hawks who were half-starved till they became tractable. Thus in Coriolanus, "I'll watch him, Till he be dieted to my request." To fast, like one who takes diet, is a comparison that occurs in The Two Gentlemen of Verona. If we are to accept the reading 'diet,' it seems preferable to accept the latter interpretation, as answering to Bertram's "turning off" of Helena. Shakespeare may have written something like "do't to me" or "do't with me," or perhaps "dye to me." (See Rom. xiv. 7.)

Since you lack virtue I will lose a husband,
Send for your ring; I will return it home,
And give me mine again.

Ber. I have it not.

King. What ring was yours, I pray you?

Dia. Sir, much like 225

The same upon your finger.

King. Know you this ring? this ring was his of late.

Dia. And this was it I gave him, being abed.

King. The story then goes false, you threw it him
Out of a casement.

Dia. I have spoke the truth. 230

Enter Attendant with PAROLLES.

Ber. My lord, I do confess the ring was hers.

King. You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts you.

Is this the man you speak of?

Dia. Ay, my lord.

King. Tell me, sirrah, but tell me true, I charge you,
Not fearing the displeasure of your master, 235

Which on your just proceeding I'll keep off,

By him and by this woman here what know you?

Par. So please your majesty, my master hath been 225, 226. Sir, . . .] Arranged as in Capell; in one line in Ff; Hanmer would put "Sir" after "finger." 227. ring?] Theobald, Ring, Ff.

223. home] Cf. "So thy great gift, upon misprision growing, comes home again" (Sonnets, lxxxvii. 12). Also, "Now to Helen is (my heart) home returned" (Midsummer-Night's Dream, III. ii. 172).

232. boggle] change about. Antony says to Cleopatra, "you have been a boggler ever," where the context tells us that he means "a fickle woman" (Antony and Cleopatra, III. xiii. 110).

237. By . . . you?] "By" is sometimes used by Shakespeare after verbs of speaking, thinking and knowing, = "about." Cf. Much Ado, v. i. 313, "anything that I do know by her"; Merchant of Venice, I. ii. 58, "how say an honourable gentleman: tricks he hath had in him, which gentlemen have. 240

King. Come, come, to the purpose: did he love this woman?

Par. Faith, sir, he did love her; but how?

King. How, I pray you?

Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman. 245

King. How is that?

Par. He loved her, sir, and loved her not.

King. As thou art a knave, and no knave. What an equivocal companion is this!

Par. I am a poor man, and at your majesty's com- 250
mand.

Laf. He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty orator.

Dia. Do you know he promised me marriage?

Par. Faith, I know more than I'll speak.

King. But wilt thou not speak all thou knowest? 255

Par. Yes, so please your majesty. I did go between them as I said; but more than that, he loved her, for indeed he was mad for her, and talked of Satan, and of limbo, and of Furies, and I know not what: yet I was in that credit with them at 260 that time, that I knew of their going to bed, and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and

243. but how?] Malone thinks that this belongs to the next speech of the king.
248. knave.] knave, Ff. 257. than that, he] F 3, 4; then that he F 1, 2.

you by the French Lord?" Also, "For I know nothing by (concerning) myself; yet am I not hereby justified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord" (1 Cor. iv. 4).

252. naughty] worthless (German, nichtig). King Lear, II. iv. 136, "Thy sister's naught: O Regan! she hath

... Sidney wrote, "A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father."

262. motions] suggestions. Cf. "I'll join my daughter to him forthwith in holy wedlock bands.—I thank you for your motion" (3 Henry VI. III. 244).

things that would derive me ill will to speak of:
therefore I will not speak what I know.

King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst 265 say they are married: but thou art too fine in thy evidence; therefore stand aside.

This ring, you say, was yours.

Dia. Ay, my good lord.

King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?

Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it. 270

King. Who lent it you?

Dia. It was not lent me neither.

King. Where did you find it then?

Dia. I found it not.

King. If it were yours by none of all these ways,
How could you give it him?

Dia. I never gave it him.

Laf. This woman's an easy glove, my lord: she goes 275 off and on at pleasure.

King. This ring was mine: I gave it his first wife.

Dia. It might be yours or hers, for aught I know.

King. Take her away; I do not like her now.

To prison with her; and away with him. 280

Unless thou tell'st me where thou hadst this ring
Thou diest within this hour.

Dia. I'll never tell you.

270. nor I did not] F 1, 2; nor did not F 3, 4. 278. ought] Theobald
(ed. 2), ought Ff.

263. derive me ill] bring down ill on me. Cf. "What friend of mine that had to him derived your anger, did I continue in my liking?" (Henry VIII.
ii. iv. 32).

266. fine] subtle. Cf. "The finest mad devil of jealousy" (Merry Wives,

v. i. 19).

270. nor I did not] one of the double negatives so common in Elizabethan literature.

King. Take her away.

Dia. I'll put in bail, my liege.

King. I think thee now some common customer.

Dia. By Jove, if ever I knew man, 'twas you. 285

King. Wherefore hast thou accus'd him all this while?

Dia. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty.

He knows I am no maid, and he'll swear to 't: •

I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.

Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life; 290

I'm either maid, or else this old man's wife.

King. She does abuse our ears: to prison with her!

Dia. Good mother, fetch my bail. [Exit Widow.

Stay, royal sir:

The jeweller that owes the ring is sent for,

And he shall surety me. But for this lord, 295

Who hath abus'd me, as he knows himself,

Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quit him:

He knows himself my bed he hath defil'd,

And at that time he got his wife with child:

Dead though she be, she feels her young one.
kick: 300

So there's my riddle: one that's dead is quick;

And now behold the meaning.

291. I'm Pope, I am Ff. 293. Exit Widow] Pope, omitted Ff.

288. knows] “‘To know’ seems to be used in more than one passage of this play in the sense of opinari, as its sister γνώμαι sometimes is” (S. Walker, Crit. Ex. iii. 81).

294. jeweller] “Jewellers were formerly the only bankers, and being therefore considered wealthy, were unexceptionable bail” (II. T.).

294. owes] possesses, as above.

297. quit him] declare him to be quit. Cf. “God quit you in his mercy” (Henry V. II. ii. 166).

Re-enter Widow with HELENA.

King. Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is't real that I see?

Hel. No, my good lord;
'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see; 305
The name and not the thing.

Ber. Both, both. O! pardon.

Hel. O my good lord! when I was like this maid,
I found you wondrous kind. There is your ring;
And, look you, here's your letter; this it says:
When from my finger you can get this ring, 310
And are by me with child, etc.

This is done:

Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?

Ber. If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly,
I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly.

Hel. If it appear not plain and prove untrue, 315
Deadly divorce step between me and you!
O! my dear mother; do I see you living?

Laf. Mine eyes smell onions; I shall weep anon.
[To Parolles.] Good Tom Drum, lend me a hand-kercher: so, I thank thee. Wait on me home, 320
I'll make sport with thee: let thy courtesies alone, they are scurvy ones.

302. Re-enter . . . Capell; Enter Hellen and Widow Ff. 303. truer office] true Office F 3, true Officer F 4. 311. are] Rowe, is Ff. 319. [To Parolles] Rowe, omitt^d F. 319, 320. Good . . . handkercher] as verse in Ff. 321. courtesies] curtsies Ff.

302. exorcist] here used in the sense of Witchcraft, Bk. xv. ii., "to raise a ghost . . . the exorcist must seek out means usual. Cf. Scott, The Discovery . . ." (W. J. C., Little Quarto Shak.).

King. Let us from point to point this story know,
 To make the even truth in pleasure flow.
 [To Diana.] If thou be'st yet a fresh uncropped flower, 325
 Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dower;
 For I can guess that by thy honest aid
 Thou kept'st a wife herself, thyself a maid.
 Of that and all the progress, more and less,
 Resolvedly more leisure shall express: 330
 All yet seems well; and if it end so meet,
 The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

[Flourish.

325. [To Diana] Rowe, omitted Ff. 328. kept'st] keptst F 1; keptst F 2; keepest F 3, 4. 330. Resolvedly] F 4, Resoldvedly F 1; Resolitu'dly F 2, 3.

324. even truth] whole truth. Cf. 330. Resolvedly] until all is resolved
 "The king hath run bad humours on or explained. Cf. "at pick'd leisure . . .
 the knight; that's the even of it" single I'll resolve you . . . of every (Henry V. II. i. 128). There is a shade These happen'd accidents" (Tempest, of meaning in it which connects it with v. i. 248).
 the verb "flow" that follows.

[EPILOGUE.

EPILOGUE

Spoken by the KING.

*The king's a beggar, now the play is done :
 All is well ended, if this suit be won,
 That you express content ; which we will pay,
 With strife to please you, day exceeding day :
 Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts ; 5
 Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts.*

[Exeunt.Epilogue . . . King] Pope.

1. The king's a beggar] Reference to the Ballad. In Love's Labour's Lost Armado asks his page, "Is there not a ballad, boy, of the King and the Beggar?" To which Moth replies, "The world was very guilty of such a ballad some three ages since ; but, I think, now 'tis not to be found ; or, if it were, it would neither serve for the writing nor the time." In spite of which remarks it has been looked for and found, Rolfe says, in Percy's Reliques. Cf. Richard II. v. iii. 80, "Our scene is altered from a serious thing, And now changed to 'The Beggar and the King.'"

4. day . . . day] every day better than the day before.

5. Ours be . . . and yours] Let us have your patience, you will have our parts, our acting.

The Ideal Library Edition: Now Complete

THE ARDEN SHAKESPEARE

GENERAL EDITORS

W. J. CRAIG, 1899-1906

R. H. CASE, from 1909

An Edition of Shakespeare in Single Plays, each with a full Introduction, Textual Notes, and a Commentary at the foot of the page. Demy 8vo, 6s. net

EDITED BY:—

All's Well That Ends Well	W. OSBORNE BRISTOCKE
Antony and Cleopatra	R. H. CASE
As You Like It	J. W. HOLME
Comedy of Errors, The	HENRY CUMINGHAM
Coriolanus	W. J. CRAIG and R. H. CASE
Cymbeline	EDWARD DOWDEN
Hamlet	EDWARD DOWDEN
Julius Cæsar	MICHAEL MACMILLAN
King Henry IV, Part I	R. P. COWL and A. E. MORGAN
King Henry IV, Part II	R. P. COWL
King Henry V	HERBERT ARTHUR EVANS
King Henry VI, Part I	H. C. HART and C. K. POOLER
King Henry VI, Part II	H. C. HART and C. K. POOLER
King Henry VI, Part III	H. C. HART and C. K. POOLER
King Henry VIII	C. KNOX POOLER
King John	IVOR B. JOHN
King Lear	W. J. CRAIG
King Richard the Second	IVOR B. JOHN
King Richard the Third	A. HAMILTON THOMPSON
Love's Labour's Lost	H. C. HART
Macbeth	HENRY CUMINGHAM
Measure for Measure	H. C. HART
Merchant of Venice, The	C. KNOX POOLER
Merry Wives of Windsor, The	H. C. HART
Midsummer-Night's Dream, A (5s. net)	H. CUMINGHAM
Much Ado about Nothing	GRACE R. TRENNERY
Othello	H. C. HART
Pericles	K. DEIGHTON
Romeo and Juliet	EDWARD DOWDEN
Sonnets and A Lover's Complaint	C. KNOX POOLER
Taming of the Shrew, The	R. WARWICK BOND
Tempest, The	MORTON LUCE
Timon of Athens	K. DEIGHTON
Titus Andronicus	H. BELLISE BAILDON
Troilus and Cressida	K. DEIGHTON
Twelfth Night, or What You Will	MORTON LUCE
Two Gentlemen of Verona	R. WARWICK BOND
Venus and Adonis; Lucrece; The Passionate Pilgrim; Sonnets to Sundry
Notes of Music; The Phoenix and the Turtle	C. KNOX POOLER
Winter's Tale, The (5s. net)	F. W. MOORMAN

METHUEN & CO. LTD., 36 ESSEX ST., LONDON, W.C. 2

The Ideal Library Edition : Now Complete

SOME OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

"We congratulate the editors and the publishers : they have deserved well of the republic of letters, for the Arden Shakespeare is the best of our working editions of Shakespeare. . . . We rank the Arden Shakespeare with the great Oxford Dictionary as the most powerful aid we possess to a full comprehension of Shakespeare"

—Times Literary Supplement.

"A critical edition of Shakespeare in a thoroughly readable form. The publishers are to be congratulated on an unobtrusively tasteful and skilful achievement in the art of book manufacture. No less are they to be congratulated on their choice of an editor. Take it all in all, his work is a model of ripe and sane scholarship."—Daily Chronicle.

"In getting up the edition is essentially one which will appeal to the genuine book-lover. The type is large, and there are ample margins. The paper used is exceedingly light in weight, and the binding is chaste but substantial. Altogether, we have nothing but praise for this new edition."—Westminster Gazette.

"This volume is a worthy addition to a charming issue of Shakespeare's works. . . . Leaves little to be desired as a model of arrangement and printing : it is light and handy, and eminently readable."—Athenæum.

"The admirable Arden Shakespeare—a work which began to appear in 1899 and, in spite of the drums and trappings of war, has pursued the majestic tenor of its way."—Spectator.

"There is nothing that approaches the Arden Shakespeare in excellence of type, lightness of form, and competent editing, combined with cheapness."—Sphere.

"A very welcome addition to the Shakespeare shelf, for its wealth of notes and parallel passages are admirably arranged. No praise can be too high."—Daily Graphic.

"It will be almost impossible to beat this edition of Shakespeare."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The most scholarly and charming of the many editions of Shakespeare."—Birmingham Post.

"A sound and excellent achievement of English publishing."

—New Statesman.

"That most scholarly and generally satisfactory series."—Guardian.

"The edition is a perfect one for the general reader."—Tribune.

"The admirable Arden Shakespeare."—Glasgow Herald.

"... einer so ausgezeichneten Ausgabe wie der Arden Shakespeare."—Literarisches Zentralblatt

THE ARDEN SHAKESPEARE

THE aim of this edition of Shakespeare is to meet in some degree the requirements of three classes of readers. There are those who care only to enjoy the play without the retardation or the disturbance of notes; for them a text, which it is hoped may be regarded as trustworthy, is printed in a type which imposes little fatigue upon the eye; such readers may wholly disregard the notes, or may refer to them on rare occasions. There are, secondly, readers who recognize the fact that many difficulties exist in what Shakespeare has written, and that the labour of editors, from Rowe to the most recent of annotators, has done much to make clear what was obscure, and to render easy what was difficult; for these readers a body of explanatory notes, in which a mean is attempted between parsimony and superfluity, has been provided. Thirdly, there are scholarly readers, who have a legitimate desire themselves to check or control the work of the editor in the formation of his text. No edition of Shakespeare of moderate size and price appears to give at once explanatory notes and adequate textual collations. In "The Arden Shakespeare" an attempt is made to exhibit the variations from the editors' texts, which are found in the primary sources, the Quartos and Folios, in so far as those variations are of importance for the ascertainment of the text in each case. Every variation is not recorded, but the editors have usually chosen to err on the side of excess rather than on that of defect.

Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
 The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,
 Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
 And by opposing end them? To die,—to sleep,— 60

No more; and by a sleep to say we end
 The heart-ache, and the thousand natural shocks
 That flesh is heir to, 'tis a consummation
 Devoutly to be wish'd. To die;—to sleep;—
 To sleep! perchance to dream! ay, there's the rub; 65

For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
 When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,

60, 61. To die,— . . . No] Pope, die to sleepe No Q, dye, to sleepe No F.
 63. to,] too; Q, too? F. 64, 65. die;—to sleep;—To sleep!] Capell, die to sleepe, To sleepe, Q, F.

Hunter, who would place the soliloquy, with Q 1, in Act II. sc. ii. supposes it is suggested by the book which Hamlet is there represented as reading. Perhaps, the explanation lying in what immediately follows, it means, Is my present project of active resistance against wrong to be, or not to be? Hamlet anticipates his own death as a probable consequence.

57. in the mind] This is to be connected with "suffer," not with "nobler."

58. slings and arrows] Walker, with an anonymous writer of 1752, would read "stings." "Slings and arrows" is found in Fletcher's Valentinian, I. iii.

59. sea] Various emendations have been suggested: "Theobald, "siege"; also, "th' assay" or "a 'say"; Hanmer, "assailing"; Warburton, "assail of"; Bailey, "the seat." It has been shown from Aristotle, Strabo, Ælian, and Nicolas of Damascus that the Kelts, Gauls, and Cimbri exhibited their intrepidity by armed combats with the sea, which Shakespeare might have found in Abraham Fleming's translation of Ælian, 1576. But elsewhere Shakespeare has "sea of joys," "sea of glory," "sea of care." Here the central metaphor is that of a battle ("slings and arrows"); the "sea of troubles," billows of the war, merely develops the metaphor of battle, as in Scott, Marmion, VI. xxvi.:

"Then mark'd they, dashing
 broad and far,
 The broken billows of the war,
 And plumed crests of chieftains
 brave,
 Floating like foam upon the wave."

63. consummation] Compare Cymbeline, IV. ii. 280:

"Quiet consummation have:
 And renowned be thy grave!"

65. rub] impediment, as in King Henry V. II. ii. 188.

67. mortal coil] trouble or turmoil of mortal life. In this sense coil occurs several times in Shakespeare,

Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them? To die,—to
sleep,— 60

No more; and by a sleep to say we end
The heart-ache, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to, 'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wish'd. To die;—to sleep;—
To sleep! perchance to dream! ay, there's the rub; 65

For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,

60, 61. To die,— . . . No] Pope, die to sleep No Q, dye, to sleep No F.
63. to,] too; Q, too? F. 64, 65. die;—to sleep;—To sleep] Capell, die to sleep, To sleep, Q, F.

Hunter, who would place the soliloquy, with Q 1, in Act II. sc. ii. supposes it is suggested by the book which Hamlet is there represented as reading. Perhaps, the explanation lying in what immediately follows, it means, Is my present project of active resistance against wrong to be, or not to be? Hamlet anticipates his own death as a probable consequence.

57. in the mind] This is to be connected with "suffer," not with "nobler."

58. slings and arrows] Walker, with an anonymous writer of 1752, would read "stings." "Slings and arrows" is found in Fletcher's Valentinian, I. iii.

59. sea] Various emendations have been suggested: Theobald, "siege"; also, "th' assay" or "a 'say"; Hammer, "assailing"; Warburton, "assail of"; Bailey, "the seat." It has been shown from Aristotle, Strabo, Ælian, and Nicolas of Damascus that the Kelts, Gauls, and Cimbri exhibited their intrepidity by armed combats with the sea, which Shakespeare might have found in Abraham Fleming's translation of Ælian, 1576. But elsewhere Shakespeare has "sea of joys," "sea of glory," "sea of care." Here the central metaphor is that of a battle ("slings and arrows"); the "sea of troubles," billows of the war, merely develops the metaphor of battle, as in Scott, Marmion, VI. xxvi.:

"Then mark'd they, dashing
broad and far,
The broken billows of the war,
And plumed crests of chieftains
brave,
Floating like foam upon the
wave."

63. consummation] Compare Cymbeline, IV. ii. 280.

"Quiet consummation have:
And renowned be thy grave!"

65. rub] impediment, as in King Henry V. II. ii. 188.

67. mortal coil] trouble or turmoil of mortal life. In this sense coil occurs several times in Shakespeare,

The Ideal Library Edition : Now Complete

SOME OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

"We congratulate the editors and the publishers : they have deserved well of the republic of letters, for the Arden Shakespeare is the best of our working editions of Shakespeare. . . . We rank the Arden Shakespeare with the great Oxford Dictionary as the most powerful aid we possess to a full comprehension of Shakespeare."

—Times Literary Supplement.

"A critical edition of Shakespeare in a thoroughly readable form. The publishers are to be congratulated on an unobtrusively tasteful and skilful achievement in the art of book manufacture. No less are they to be congratulated on their choice of an editor. Take it all in all, his work is a model of ripe and sane scholarship." —Daily Chronicle.

"In general the edition is essentially one which will appeal to the genuine book-lover. The type is large, and there are ample margins. The paper used is exceedingly light in weight, and the binding is chaste but substantial. Altogether, we have nothing but praise for this new edition." —Westminster Gazette.

"This volume is a worthy addition to a charming issue of Shakespeare's works. . . . Leaves little to be desired as a model of arrangement and printing : it is light and handy, and eminently readable." —Athenaeum.

"The admirable Arden Shakespeare—a work which began to appear in 1899 and, in spite of the drums and trappings of war, has pursued the majestic tenor of its way." —Spectator.

"There is nothing that approaches the Arden Shakespeare in excellence of type, lightness of form, and competent editing, combined with cheapness." —Sphere.

"A very welcome addition to the Shakespeare shelf, for its wealth of notes and parallel passages are admirably arranged. No price can be too high." —Daily Graphic.

"It will be almost impossible to do without this edition of Shakespeare." —Pall Mall Gazette.

"The most scholarly and charming of the many editions of Shakespeare." —Birmingham Post.

"A sound and excellent achievement of English publishing."

—New Statesman.

"That most scholarly and generally satisfactory series." —Guardian.

"The edition is a perfect one for the general reader." —Tribune.

"The admirable Arden Shakespeare." —Glasgow Herald.

"... einer so ausgezeichneten Ausgabe wie der Arden Shakespeare." —Literarisches Zentralblatt.

